

70,000 HINDUS REINFORCE THE ALLIES

INDIAN TROOPS HAVE BEEN WITH THE BRITISH SINCE TUESDAY

Landed at Marseilles and Their Presence Kept Secret Until Today

COOPERATING NORTH OF THE AISNE RIVER

Arrival of These Troops Was Welcomed by the Allies—Vigorous Offensive Movements of the Allied Troops on Both Flanks of the Germans Continued—Report That the Kaiser's Soldiers Are Showing Signs of Weakening, But They Make Fierce Counter Attacks—The Twentieth Day of the Great Battle Finds Both Armies in About the Same Positions as When the Fighting Started.

(By International News Service)

Paris, Oct. 1.—It was announced here this morning that 70,000 Hindu troops are participating in the battle on the river Aisne, where fierce fighting has been going on for twenty days, with variable results.

The arrival of these Indian troops has been kept a secret by the war department, but it is now stated that the Hindus arrived on Tuesday. It is believed that these fresh troops are cooperating with the British north of the Aisne river near its confluence with the Oise river. The Hindus disembarked at Marseilles.

Vigorous Offensive Movement.

Reports from the scene of strife this morning were to the effect that the allies are keeping up their vigorous offensive movements against the Germans on both flanks.

The arrival of these Indian troops the allies to relieve some of their troops who have been under terrific fire for the past twenty days in the worst battle the world has ever known.

Germans Growing Exhausted.

The Germans continue their counter attacks, but it is said they are showing signs of great exhaustion.

The people of Paris are growing impatient because of the meagerness of the battle issued by the war department and demand that they be given fuller news of the battle.

French Report Progress.

It was officially stated this afternoon: "There is no modification of the situation as a whole. We have progressed on our left north of the River Somme and on our right in the southern part of the Woëvre region."

No Signs of the End.

Battle Front (By way of Paris), Oct. 1.—Yesterday was the nineteenth day of continued hard fighting along the 150-mile front from the Somme to the Moselle and yet there is no definite indication that the historic battle is nearing a finish. There are, however, evidences that the Germans are receding before a forcible and sustained pushing from the allied armies, especially on their western and eastern wings, while the center, where the Germans are more strongly entrenched than at any other point with heavy artillery, remains almost stationary.

German Wings Folding Back.

The German wings appear to be folding back on the center, leaving the sole loophole for a backward movement by way of Rethel.

The Germans' main supply base at Juniville, which is protected by heavy masses of troops, as it is absolutely essential that this place shall be held for the re-equipping of the German armies in Northwestern France, appears to be placed in a somewhat precarious situation with its single line of railroad.

German Ships Fire on Russian Harbor Works

(By International News Service) Petrograd, Oct. 1.—The navy ministry announced that on September 23, a German fleet of 10 ships appeared off Windau, but was prevented from landing forces by the Russian coast guard. The ships then withdrew, but the next day two cruisers returned, opening fire on the harbor works, killing a number of soldiers and civilians but were again driven off.

LOCAL POSTOFFICE FORCE COUNTING MAIL MATTER

Beginning today the employees of the Clearfield postoffice will, for the first thirty days coming, piece and weigh all mail passing through the local office. This work covers all mail received and delivered in the town and on the rural routes, in all four classes.

For seven days the postoffice force will count all mail dropped into the local office, making records of all the pieces and the amount of postage required on the pieces. It is believed that this order of the post office department is to ascertain information relative to the proposed reduction of postage.

The task before the local employees is a big one to the proposed reduction of postage.

The task before the local employees is a big one and may cause some delay in the distribution and delivery of mail, but Postmaster Martin hopes that the delay will only be slight.

The postmaster has received instruction to ascertain how many people are complying with the rule of the department requiring all house holders to have mail boxes at their homes or slots in their doors for the reception of mail. It is found that fully fifty per cent. of the citizens of Clearfield do not have these conveniences, and as the department is likely to issue an order prohibiting carriers to deliver mail at homes where there are no boxes or slots it behooves the citizens to get busy and provide a base.

Carriers lose much valuable time delivering mail where there are no boxes or slots.

Anti-Saloon League Convention.

The Clearfield County Anti-Saloon League convention will be held on Tuesday, Oct. 13, in Clearfield. Program of meeting will be sent to each pastor in the county.

Decision Against Roosevelt

(By International News Service) Albany, Oct. 1.—Supreme Court Justice Chester, today denied the application of Colonel Roosevelt for a change of venue, in the libel suit brought against him by William Barnes.

Colonel Roosevelt maintained that he could not get a fair trial in this county.

Will Soon be 84.

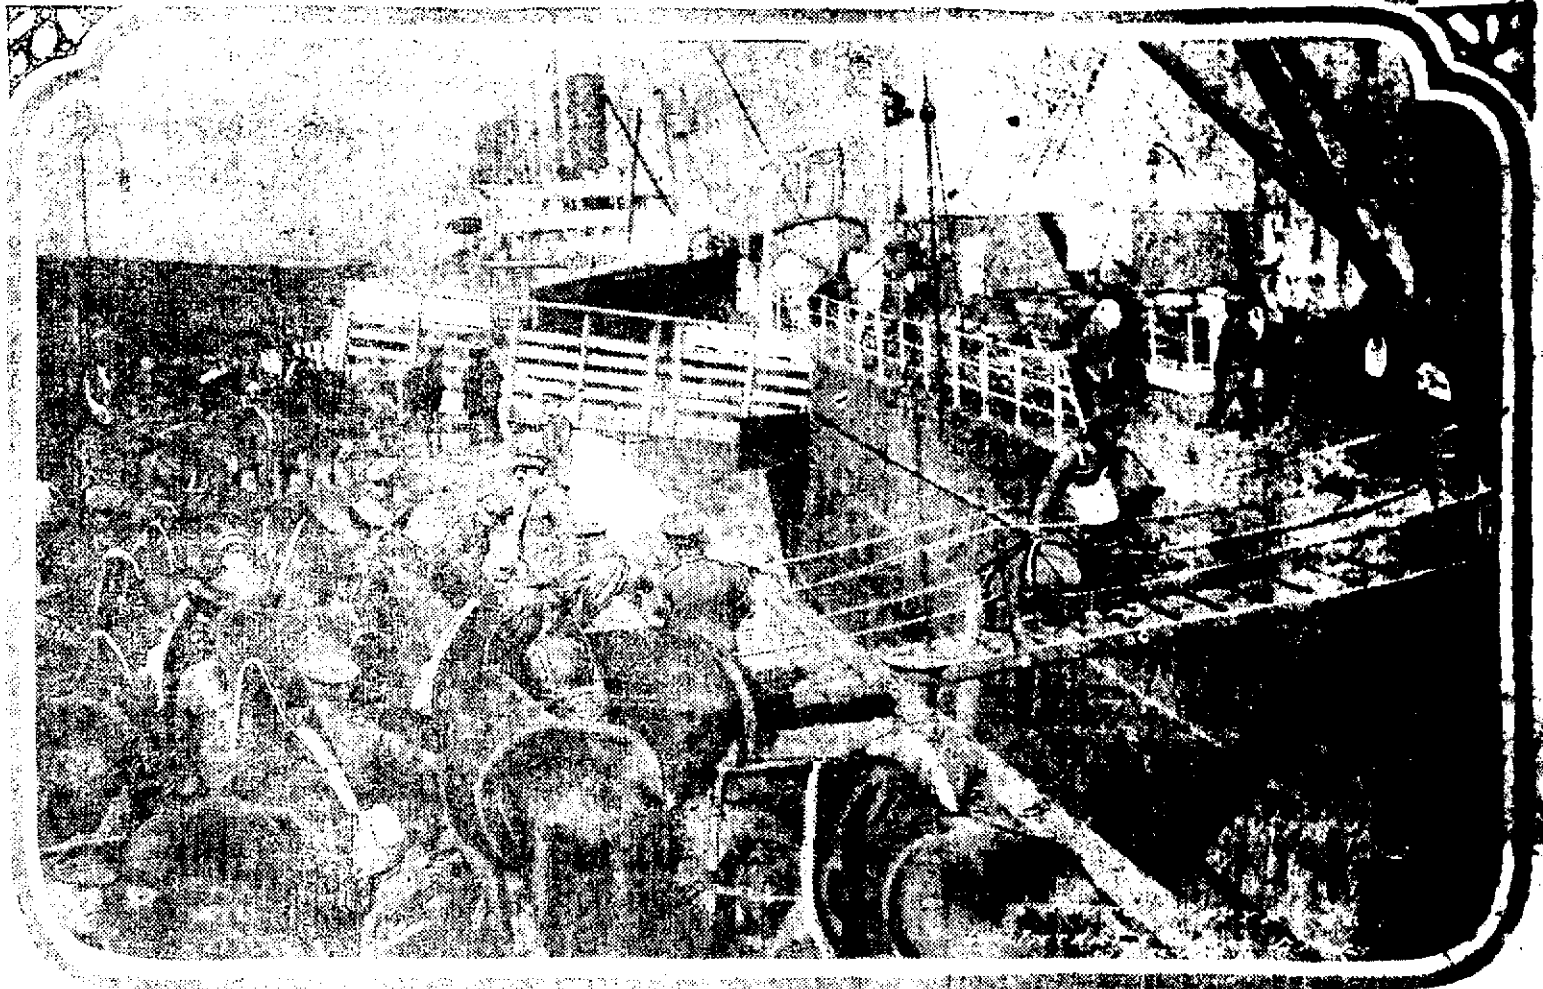

Henry B. Shugart, of Knox township, gave this office a pleasant call today. Mr. Shugart will be 84 years of age next Sunday, although he is as active as a man of 60.

Gifford Pinchot Has Fully Recovered From Illness

(Special to The Progress.) Philadelphia, Oct. 1.—Gifford Pinchot, Washington party coordinator for United States senator, announced today that he is as well as ever and will speak at the mass meeting with General Roosevelt tonight, to be held in the First Regiment armory here.

"LITTLE BOY BLUE" PLEASED AUDIENCE

Harry Houdini, the famous escape artist, appeared at the Globe Theatre last night and gave a splendid performance. He was dressed in a green and gold costume and was very entertaining. He was accompanied by a band of musicians and a chorus of singers. The performance was very successful and the audience was very pleased.

PLACE NOW FULL OF REFUGEES

Panic-Stricken People Rushing to New Capital in Dread of Being Punished by the Angry Germans—Fully Prepared for the Zeppelin Airships.

(By International News Service)

Antwerp, Belgium, October 1st.—An Englishwoman, Miss Louise Mack, a well known writer of fiction, has written the following vivid description of this ancient seaport in wartime. Antwerp again has won the spot-light in this war. The town has become the haven of thousands of refugees, Belgians, British and Americans. The capital of Belgium was transferred here from Brussels, and German Zeppelins brought the city into prominence by bombarding it from the skies at night. Miss Mack writes: "Slowly, painfully, through the blazing summer day, our huge brown train goes creeping toward Antwerp. Antwerp? The name has grown into an emblem of hope in these sad days, when the Belgians are fleeing for their lives from their homes among flat green pastures, fleeing towards their own fortified city that we English know as Antwerp, or else directing their desperate, unaided flights to the feeble peace and security of the far off and mysterious Angleterre."

CORRECTION OF REPORT OF FLOWER COMMITTEE

An unfortunate mixup of types in yesterday's report of the meeting of the Woman's club made unintelligible that paragraph relating to the report of the flower growing committee, and in order to give our readers an idea of what was intended to be said the paragraph as originally written is here given:

In reviewing the activities of the club for the past year the members feel that their efforts have borne fruit. The report of the flower committee was gratifying and this work will be continued next year. The purpose of the committee is to arouse greater interest in flower growing, which will gradually increase until the beautifying of the whole town will be the result.

Austria Apologizes to Italy

(By International News Service)

Rome, Oct. 1.—It is officially announced that Austria has apologized to Italy for the presence of mines near the Italian coast, in Adriatic, and has expressed regret for the sinking of Italian ships, promising to remove the mines and pay damages to the victims.

Austria's action it is believed, averted a crisis that would have led to war if Vienna had not heeded Italy's protest. Indemnity estimates range between a half and one million dollars.

DAVID PHILLIPS SLOWLY RECOVERING FROM INJURIES

David Phillips, of Faunee, was in Clearfield yesterday. Mr. Phillips is the young man who was so terribly injured by an explosion in the city mine at Faunee on June 16 last, receiving wounds which left him in a bad physical condition. He has not been able to work, since the accident.

Mr. Phillips declares that he was not responsible for the explosion, as was stated at the time. He was regarded as one of the most careful employees of Harrison, Walker & Co. and received his injuries through the carelessness of another miner. His head and face were terribly shattered and he lost the sight of one eye. The frontal bone on the left side of his head was fractured and the brain escaped injury by a very close shave. At present Mr. Phillips is still suffering from his wounds but his mind is recovering its old-time functions.

Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Thorn and daughter Gussie will motor to Williamsport tomorrow. Mr. and Mrs. Thorn will spend the rest of the week with friends, returning Sunday, and Miss Gussie will spend the next week with Miss Mary Connelly, who is spending the winter in Williamsport.

The Million Dollar Mystery

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

"What, Norton?"
"Yes. The trouble is with you, you have been so successful all these years that you have grown overconfident. I tell you that there is a desperately shrewd man somewhere back of all this. Mark me, I do not believe Hargrave is dead. He is in hiding. It may be near by. He may have dropped from the balloon before it left land. The man they picked up may be Oris, the aeronaut. The five thousand might have been his fee for rescuing Hargrave. Here is the greatest thing we've ever been up against; and you start in with every day methods!"
"Little woman, don't let your tongue run away with you too far."
"I'm not the least bit afraid of you, Leo. You read me, and it has never been more apparent than at this moment."

"All right. I fell by the wayside this trip. Truthfully, I realized it five minutes after the men were gone. The only clever thing I did was to keep the mask on my face. They can't come back at me. But the thing looked so easy; and it would have worked but for Norton's appearance."

"You all but compromised me. That butler worries me a little." Her expression lost its anger and grew thoughtful. "He's always about somewhere. Do you think Hargrave took him into his confidence?"

"Can't tell. He's been watched straight for 48 hours. He hasn't mailed a letter or telephoned to any place but the grocery. There have been no telegrams. Some one in that house knows where the money is, and it's ten to one that it will be the girl."

"She looks enough like Katrina to be her ghost."
Braine went over to the window and stared up at the stars.
"You have made a good impression on the girl?" with his back still toward her.

"I had her in my arms."

"Olga, my hat is off to you," turning, now that his face was again in repose. "Your very frankness regarding your relationship will pull the wool over their eyes. Of course they'll make inquiries and they'll find out that you haven't lied. It's perfect. Not even that newspaper wench will see anything wrong. Toward you they will eventually ease up and you can act without their even dreaming your part in the business. We must not be seen in public any more. This butler may know where I stand even though he cannot prove it. Now, I'm going to tell you something. Perhaps you've long since guessed it. Katrina was mine till Hargrave—never mind what his name was then—till Hargrave came into the fold. So sure of her was I that I used her as a lure to bring him to us. She fell in love with him, but too late to warn him. I had the satisfaction of seeing him cast her aside, curse her, and leave her. In one thing she fooled us all. I never knew of the child till you told me."

He paused to light a cigarette.
"Hargrave was madly in love with her. He cursed her, but he came back to the house to forgive her, to find that she had been seized by the secret police and entombed in the fortress. I had my revenge. It was I who sent in the information, practically bogus. But in Russia they never question; they act and forget. So he had a daughter!"

He began pacing the floor, his hands behind his back; and the woman watched him, oscillating between love and fear. He came to a halt abruptly and looked down at her.

"Don't worry. You have no rival. I'll leave the daughter to your tender mercies."

"The butler," she said, "has full powers of attorney to act for Hargrave while absent, up to the day the girl becomes of legal age."

"I'll keep an eye on our friend Jones. From now on, day and night, there will be a cat at the knothole, and 'ware mouse! Could you make up anything like this girl?" suddenly.

"A fair likeness."

"Do it. Go to the ship which picked up the man at sea and quiz the captain. Either the aviator or Hargrave is alive. It is important to learn which at once. Be very careful; play the game only as you know how to play it. And if Hargrave is alive, we win. Tomorrow morning, early. Tears of anguish, and all that. Sailors are easy when a woman weeps. No color, remember; just the yellow wig and the salient features. Now, by-by!"

"Aren't you going to kiss me, Leo?" He caught her hands. "There is a species of Delilah about you, Olga. A kiss tonight from your lips would snip my locks; and I need a clear head. Whether we fail or win, when this game is played you shall be my wife." He kissed the hands and strode out into the hall.

The woman gazed down at her small white hands and smiled tenderly. (The fortress has her tender moments!) He meant it!

She went into her dressing room and for an hour or more worked over her face and hair, till she was certain that if the captain of the ship described her to anyone else he could not fail to give a fair description of Florence Hargrave.

But Norton reached the captain first. Other reporters had besieged him, but they had succeeded in gathering the vaguest kind of information. They had no description of Hargrave, while Norton had. Before going down to the boat, however, he had delved into the past of the Princess Olga Perigoff. It cost him a pocketful of money, but the end justified the means. The princess had no past worth mentioning. By giving this and that together he became assured that she had told the simple truth regarding the relationship of a Florence's mother. A cablegram given him all the facts in her history were no gaps or discrepancies. It read clear and frank. Trust a Russian secret agent to know what he was talking about.

So Norton's suspicions—and he had entertained some—were completely lulled to sleep. And he wouldn't have doubted her at all except for the fact that Braine had been with her when he had introduced Hargrave. Hargrave had feared Braine; that much the reporter had elicited from the butler. But there wasn't the slightest evidence. Braine had been in New York for nearly six years. The princess had arrived in the city but a year gone. And Braine was a member of several fashionable clubs, never touched cards, and seldom drank. He was an expert chess player and a wonderful amateur billiardist. Perhaps Jones, the taciturn and inscrutable, had not told him all he knew regarding his master's past. Well, well; he had in his time untangled worse snarls. The office had turned him loose, a free lance, to handle the case as he saw fit, to turn in the story when it was complete.

But what a story it was going to be when he cleared it up! The more mystifying it was, the greater the zest and sport for him. Norton was like a gambler who played for big stakes, and only big stakes stirred his cravings.

"I Am Not Afraid of You, Leo."

The captain of the tramp steamer Orient told him the same tale he had told the other reporters; he had picked up a man at sea. The man had been brought aboard totally exhausted.

"Was there another body any where?"

"No."
"What became of him?"
"I sent a wireless and that seemed to bother him. It looked so that he did not want anybody to learn that he had been rescued. The moment the boat touched the pier he lost himself in the crowd. Fifty reporters came aboard, but he was gone. And I could not tell them just what I'm telling you."

"He had money."
"About five thousand."
"Please describe him."

The captain did so. It was the same description he had given to all the reporters. Norton looked over the rail at the big warehouse.

"Was it an ordinary balloon?"

"There you've got me. My Marconi man says the balloon part was like any other balloon; but the passenger car was a new business to him. It could be driven against the wind."

"Driven against the wind. Did you tell this to the other chaps?"

"Don't think I did. Just remembered it. Probably some new invention; and now it's at the bottom of the sea. Two men, as I understand it, went off in this contraption. One is gone for good."

"For good," echoed the reporter gravely. "Gone for good, indeed, poor devil! Norton took out a roll of bills. 'There's two hundred in this roll.' 'Well,' said the captain, vastly astonished.

"It's yours if you will do me a small favor."

"If it doesn't get me mixed up with the police, I'm only captain of a tramp; and some of the harbor police have taken a dislike to me. What do you want me to do?"

"The police will not bother you. This man Hargrave had some enemies; they want either his life or his money; maybe both. It is a peculiar case, with Russia in the background. He might have laid the whole business before the police, but he chose to fight it out himself. And to tell the truth, I don't believe the police would have done any good."

"Leave her over; what do you want me to do for that handsome roll of money?"

"If any man or woman who is not a reporter comes to pump you tell them the man went ashore with a packet under his arm."

"Tie a knot in that."
"Say that the man was gray haired, clean shaven, straight, with a scar high up on his forehead, generally covered up by his hair."

"That's battened down, my lad. Go on."

"Say that you saw him enter yonder warehouse, and later depart without his packet."

"Easy as groping my mudhook."

"That's all," Norton gave the captain the money. "Good-by and many thanks."

"Don't mention it."

Norton left the slip and proceeded to the office of the warehouse. He approached the manager's desk.

"Hello, Granis, old top!"
The man looked up from his work surlily. Then his face brightened.

"Norton? What's brought you here?"
O, yes; that balloon business. Sit down."

"What kind of a man is the captain of that old hooker in the slip?"

"Shifty in gun running, but otherwise as square as a die. Looks funny to see an old tub like that fixed up with wireless; but that has saved his neck a dozen times when he was running it into a noose. Not going to interview me, are you?"

"No. I'm going to ask you to do me a little favor."

"They always say that. But spin her out. If it doesn't cost me my job, it's yours."

"Well, there will be a person making inquiries about the mysterious aeronaut. All I want you to say is, that he left a packet with you, that you've put it in that safe till he calls to claim it."

Granis nibbled the end of his pen. "Suppose some one should come and demand that I open the safe and deliver?"

"All you've got to do is to tell them to show the receipt signed by you."

The warehouse manager laughed. "Got a lot of sense in that ivory dome of yours. All right. But if anything happens you've got to come around and back me up. What's it about?"

"That I dare not tell you. This much, I'm laying a trap and I want some one I don't know to fall into it." "On your way, James. But if you don't send me some prize fight tickets next week for this, I'll never do you another favor."

In reply Norton took from his pocket two bits of pasteboard and laid them on the desk. "I knew you'd be wanting something like this."

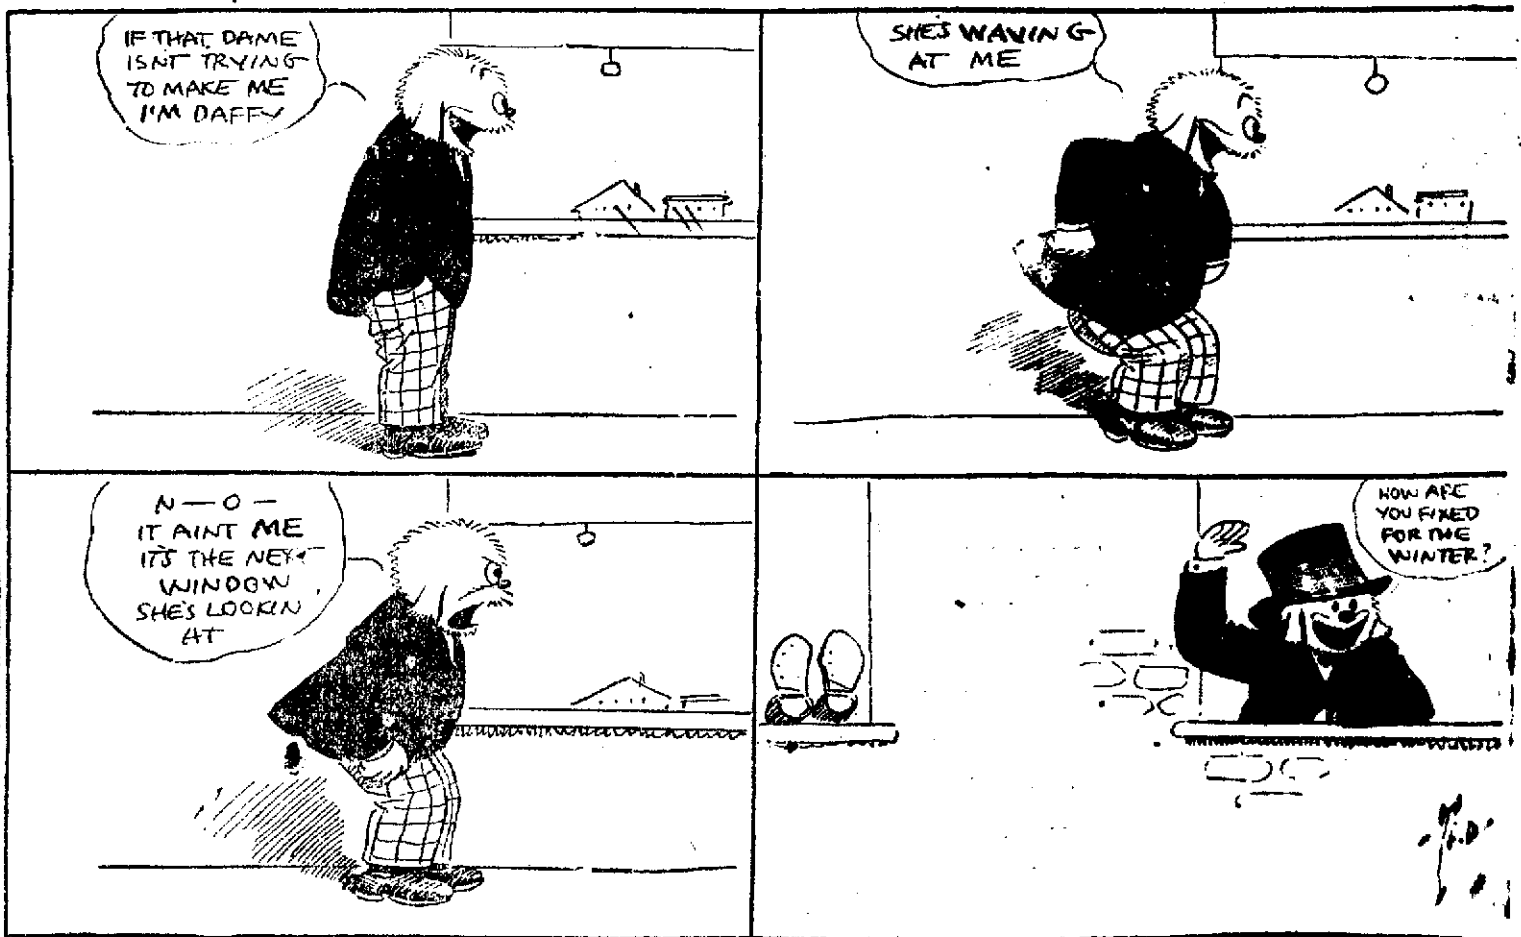

"Ringside!" cried Granis. "You reporters are lucky devils!"

"I'd go myself if there was any earthly chance of a real scrap. You make me laugh, Gran. You're always going, always hoping the next one will be a real one. But it's all bunk. The pugs are the biggest fakers on top the sod. They've got us newspaper men done to a frazzle."

N. Y. TRIBUNE'S CALL TO PENNSYLVANIA

The New York Tribune, the historic national organ of the Republican party since the days of Greeley; consistent supporter of Republican nominees, and the leading newspaper advocate of the candidacy of Mr. Taft in 1912, prints the following editorial under the caption, "Pennsylvania Should Unite on Pinchot to Defeat Penroseism."

"Mr. Penrose should be beaten. It will be a bad thing for public life in America if the forces which he represents triumph in the Pennsylvania senatorial contest. It will be a ruinous thing for the Republican party if Mr. Penrose and his kind come to the front in it once more."

His defeat will save the state of Pennsylvania from the discredit of unworthy representation in the United States senate. It will stem the tide of reaction of which this victory in the primaries is an ominous sign. And the Republican party will be stronger when it enters the next national campaign with Penrose in the background rather than in the foreground.

The party must keep faith with the public if it is to have any hope of regaining its vigor. It must reject reactionary leadership everywhere and at all times.

This recrudescence of Penrose is a challenge to the progressive element in the Republican party everywhere. There must be no compromise with the forces of reaction. The party's house must be thoroughly cleaned and the party completely reorganized. If a real fight is not made, if drastic steps are not taken, the old machine will be found, as in Pennsylvania, to have profited by the undeniable sawing away from President Wilson and to be as firmly entrenched in power as it was when it brought the party to disruption in 1912.

It is because the issue is so big, so vitally important to the country and to the party, that the Tribune has no sympathy with the cowardly counsels that have prevailed in Pennsylvania and that have enabled Penrose to win his victory at the primaries.

It has been argued there that Penrose represented the best chance of success at the election, that he had the machine and the support of the "interests." Newspapers in Philadelphia which were supposed to stand for independence of the machine have kept silent, either at the bidding of the forces behind Mr. Penrose or for fear of impairing the Republican party's chances.

The selfish interests may profit by Penrose's success, but it will be costly victory for the Republican party which brings him forward as an embodiment of its aims and an index of its character.

The Tribune hopes that Pennsylvania will elect Mr. Gifford Pinchot, the candidate of the Progressive party, as its next senator. He is a worthier candidate than the man chosen at the Democratic primaries. The necessity for defeating Penroseism transcends all partisan consideration. Opposition to it should not be divided. The Democratic candidate ought to withdraw. All citizens, irrespective of party affiliations, should unite in support of Mr. Pinchot.

WAR'S HUGE COST TO SPEED PEACE

Prolonged Struggle Would Be Financial Disaster.

BILLIONS HAVE BEEN SPENT

Nations Involved Believed to Have Thought Conflict Would Be Comparatively Brief—Already Burdened With Old Debts of the Same Kind. Their Industries Paralyzed.

One of the most powerful elements that is at work today for the settlement of the great European war is the appalling cost of the titanic conflict. It can be only a matter of time until every one of the warring powers is embarrassed financially. It is not assuming too much, says the Washington Post, to say that each of the nations, with its great armament, believed that war, when it came, would be of brief duration, that the stupendous cost and the terrible loss of life wrought by modern war machinery would bring any conflict to a quick termination.

The immense war appropriations of the combatants, huge as they are, will be only a mere bagatelle if the war is prolonged. Germany at the outset appropriated $1,250,000,000. France on the same day set aside more than $1,000,000,000.

CALLS ON LABOR MEN TO BEAVER VALLEY SEES REPUDIATE BETRAYERS BIG PINCHOT SENTIMENT

From the Iron City Trades Journal

The working men of this state and particularly the organized workmen never had a more clearer proposition to vote for, or the men for whom they should vote, the coming election. The principal questions, and we say it advisedly, is the workmen's compensation law and child labor law for the candidates on the different tickets are talking about these laws and placing the blame for the lack of these laws where it rightly belongs. The workmen have been informed by the State Federation of Labor through their officials and the legislative committee, who was responsible for the killing of those bills and if they support the same men again then they are to blame, not the politicians. Don't forget, men, that the State Federation of Labor, holding its annual convention in Reading, Pa., in May 1913, adjourned the convention for a day to go in special train to Harrisburg and marched in a body into the state senate and appeared before the senatorial committee and pleaded for those humane laws. Don't forget that your delegated representatives of labor were insulted, sneered and jeered, and don't forget that the Grange had a special trainload of bejeveled and silk-gowned women there to influence the senators to not pass a child labor law and they did not. Think of the many maimed and crippled workmen in our state; think of the suffering and hardship endured by the penniless wives and mothers of those unfortunates; think of the little children forced onto the street to beg or sell papers by reason of the fact that these supposed to be honorable men had not the courage or humanity in them to give you a law that would at least help feed the hungry. Men and particularly organized men, who know of these acts, and who committed them, gird on your armor of unbiulism, start and tell your neighbors you have the facts. It is your duty to yourself and family; it is your duty to the state to see to it that not one of the men responsible for the defeat of those worthy bills should be sent back to represent you in any branch of our government. And when the time comes to vote and you are undecided take a look at the crippled father, husband, brother and son; take your little child in your arms; look it in the face, then ask yourself will you vote for men who will not protect the child?

Beaver county took an important part in the great Anti-Saloon meeting in Harrisburg on Thursday, when a demand was made for a consistent line up of the party representing the Anti-Saloon sentiment. Vance McCormick for governor, and Pinchot for United States Senator were endorsed, and the request made for Mr. Palmer to retire in favor of Pinchot. Several persons represented Beaver county, Robert Ritchie, Esq., being secretary of the meeting, and Philip Schunaber was present from New Brighton. This is one of the most practical moves yet made, and it will doubtless be a powerful factor in the campaign. With McCormick for governor and "Farmer" Creasy for lieutenant governor and Pinchot for senator, we have a combination that carries confidence and influence, and promises to be a winner.—Beaver Valley News.

NOW UP TO PALMER

In politics some things are as easy as others. For example, William Draper Lewis declares his present mission in politics to be to wipe out the Penroseism. Therefore, he resigns from his party ticket and espouses the candidacy of his Democratic opponent. Mr. Palmer declares it to be his chief desire to defeat Penroseism. Why not retire, then, and leave the field to Gifford Pinchot? Mr. Palmer replies that Mr. Pinchot ought to retire. But that is rather ungracious. Turn about is fair play. Because Mr. Lewis withdrew is no reason why our Democratic brethren should ask the Progressives to get off the earth. But there is another reason why Mr. Palmer should withdraw if he is thinking solely of the defeat of Penroseism. We venture to think that if Mr. Pinchot gave way that Mr. Penrose would defeat Mr. Palmer. There is but one man in the state at the present time who could defeat Mr. Penrose. That man is Gifford Pinchot. We believe this to be true whether Mr. Palmer stays in the fight or not. Mr. Palmer thinks Mr. Lewis did a brave thing to advance a cause which both have at heart. There can be very little doubt about the success of that cause if Mr. Palmer followed Dean Lewis' example and made it possible to offer a clean-cut ticket to the voters. Penrose and Pinchot, against Pinchot and Lewis.—Somerset.

ENDROMOUS COST OF NAVIES.

Powers Spent $925,750,000 This Year and $445,160,000 in 1905.

The British admiralty has issued a "White Paper" which shows the great growth of expenditure in naval armaments in the last decade. A comparison of expenditure in 1905 and 1914 shows the following figures:

	1905.	1914.
Britain	£25,000,000	£110,000,000
France	22,000,000	55,000,000
Russia	12,000,000	35,000,000
Germany	11,000,000	18,000,000
Italy	5,000,000	12,000,000
Austria	2,000,000	7,000,000
U.S.A.	2,000,000	20,000,000
Japan	2,500,000	10,000,000
Total	£79,500,000	£252,000,000

The personnel of the navies of the great powers now at war is given as follows for the current year: Britain, 151,000; France, 60,000; Russia, 59,427; Germany, 75,000; Austria, 23,000; Japan, 50,000. Of powers not at war the personnel of the navy of the United States is 67,000 and of Italy 40,000.

Stamping by Aeroplane. Campaigning in an aeroplane is one of the latest novelties in political stamping in Massachusetts. A. October 1, 1914.

Good evening! Remember, he who can smile under adverse circumstances is worthy of being classed as a benefactor of mankind.

Patronize the circulating library and help the hospital fund along.

The old-fashioned mother who knew where her boy or girl was at night appears to have died some years ago.

Why don't the anti-Palmer Democrats get up a demonstration to let the other side know they are living?

If congress wants to do something which will please intelligent people let it place a high tax on cigarettes.

The divine command, "Thou shalt not kill," has been expurgated from the bibles used by the rulers of Europe.

Probably Americans have underrated the abilities of Villa and overrated the honesty of Carranza. The latter would not have been known but for Villa.

Still, Palmer would be better able to convince the voters that he is opposed to Penrose's election if he were to withdraw and give Pinchot a chance to defeat Penrose.

There are members of congress who are as ignorant as to who started the European war as is the veriest backwoodsman. King Greed began the mighty conflict.

Local baseball fans will be interested in watching the progress of the world series of games between the Athletics and the Bostonians, and then they can turn their attention to football.

The Fatherland, a periodical which seeks to drum up sympathy for Germany in this war, would make more friends for Germany if it were not for the fact that it cannot tell the truth.

The Woman's club wants to make Clearfield a more beautiful town, which is a laudable ambition, but to make Clearfield a better town morally is a more important problem.

A Norristown man says he can pronounce all the names in which battles have been fought in Europe. Other places need not hope to lay claim to having whiskey to beat that in Norristown.

While the Philadelphia Ledger opposes the election of Penrose it advocates the election of Brumbaugh. Penrose's candidate for governor. Which leads us to wonder if the Ledger ever heard of the word consistency.

A beneficial result might be arrived at if some of those most rabid hyphenated foreigners were put aboard a steamer and started for their fatherlands. This plan would at least put an end to much of the unparliamentary discussion of the war now going on in the columns of some of the newspapers in this country.

We suggest that the naturalization papers of Herman Ridder, of New York, be examined. Surely a man who has fore sworn allegiance to the emperor of Germany would not devote his time and talents to abusing American citizens who take to themselves the right to express their own opinions of the European powers who brought on this horrible war.

ANTI-PENROSE FORCES.

It's as true today as when the saw was first pronounced—a man is known by the company he keeps. In this campaign, in which Senator Penrose seeks re-election to the United States senate, he is surrounded by Republicans of that class which has been designated as stand-patters. These are Republicans who do not care what political offenses a candidate may have committed and are willing to support and vote for such men as Penrose regardless of their past unsavory record.

Senator Penrose is endorsed by the liquor interests of the state, who have always found him willing to advance their interests in the United States senate or in the Pennsylvania legislature, which he owns. The liquor interests are prepared to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars in the effort to elect Penrose and such other candidates as they believe will take care of them in future legislation. The liquor interests see the handwriting on the wall, and they desire to prevent the state of Pennsylvania going dry, which it most probably would do if the people were permitted to vote on the question.

Senator Penrose is supported by the beneficiaries of special privilege. The senator has stood loyally by the side of special privilege and against the common people. His vote in the senate, when he was present to vote, has been in favor of special privilege and against the workingmen. The trusts and combinations are for Penrose because he has been their friend in the past and no doubt has promised to work for the advancement of their interests in the future, if given the chance. The only candidate who is not owned and controlled by the liquor interests and the trusts and combinations is Gifford Pinchot, and his election will give to Pennsylvania a United States senator who would represent all of the people all of the time.

WOMAN'S CLUB JOINS CRUSADE

Clearfield's Woman's club, in thanking Chief of Police McHenry for inaugurating a crusade against vulgarity in this town, has joined the movement which has for its object the breaking up of a very offensive habit into which men and boys have been led through past neglect. With the women and the men who believe that the time is ripe for correcting evils which all know should not exist, the probabilities are that Clearfield will in time be a town in which women and girls may pass along the street without being subjected to offensive stares from young men.

The young men themselves could help very materially to end the reign of vulgarity in Clearfield if they were to reflect that in using vulgar language they stamp themselves as loafers, a title which none of them should desire to have applied to himself. No gentleman uses profane or indecent language, especially in the presence of females. No gentleman stares at women and girls who pass by. The young men who have been guilty of these offenses cannot complain if they are classed as hoodlums, for only a hoodlum will act as some of the young men and boys of Clearfield have been acting in the past. Parents can help very materially in the work of reformation if they will see that their young sons are at home at night, for those boys who stay away from their homes after nine o'clock at night do so with the knowledge and consent of their parents. A curfew law strictly enforced would also be of great aid in keeping off the streets boys and girls of tender age. Clearfield should endeavor to get rid of the odium which attaches to the town through the misconduct of its young boys and girls.

THE STOUGH SERVICES.

Evangelist Stough is in his second week of work in behalf of sinners at DuBois. Nightly large crowds of people attend the Stough services, and his talks are listened to with great attention by all, although some things he says are not as pleasant as sinners would have statements from the pulpit. Dr. Stough is plain spoken. He has the courage of his convictions and hews without regard to where the chips fall. He is doing an immense amount of good, and wherever he goes he leaves behind him evidence of the power of his discourses.

Clearfield people who heard Evangelist Connell in this place last year should be interested in the work of Dr. Stough. There are a whole lot of people in Clearfield who endorse what Dr. Stough says who should express their appreciation of evangelistic work by visiting DuBois and attending the services. Last Sunday a large number of people from Osceola went to DuBois to hear Dr. Stough. Are the people of Clearfield less concerned regarding the spread of the gospel than are those of Osceola and other towns in the county? Why cannot a special train be secured and a crowd of Clearfield people be taken to DuBois to encourage Dr. Stough by their presence?

We've ridiculed all politicians,
And caucuses that have been packed
We've said what we could of club

To Mary who had the small lamb.
We've also exposed the young hopeful
Who steals to the cupboard for jam

We've harpooned the telephone gossip
The street car conductor as well.
The porters, the coppers, the barbers
And others, too many to tell.

We've searched through the earth, sky and water.
We've verified every unknown pun,
And oft' we have reached the conclusion

There's nothing new under the sun.
O list to the wail of the scribbler,
We ask it upon bended knees.
Can't somebody start a new notion?
Won't somebody do something,
please?

AMUSEMENTS

This Play a Gem.
"Seven Hours in New York" the big musical show, booked for promises to delight the large audience that usually turns out when anything good comes our way. This play is a gem. The company and chorus of exceedingly pretty girls, are capable. An enjoyable entertainment is promised Friday evening, Oct. 2.

A Fine Drama.
One of the noteworthy events of the dramatic season will be the presentation in play form at New opera house on Tuesday night of Harold Bell Wright's thrilling book of rugged life in the southwest, "The Winning of Barbara W." The dramatization is by Mark Swan and follows closely the theme of the novel, introducing all the characters that are so delightfully remembered by those who have read the novel. Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger equipped the piece for its original appearance at the Studebaker Theatre. Chicago, with a massive and magnificent scenic production, creating in elaborate detail "The Round Top" and "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine." The Chicago production will be seen here Sept. 29 and 30.

The Last Shot

By
FREDERICK PALMER

(Copyright, 1914, by Charles Scribner's Sons)

"The one way to end the feud between the two nations was a war that would mean permanent peace," he explained, seeing how quiet she was and realizing, with a recollection of her children's oath, that he had gone a little too far. He wanted to retain her admiration. It had become as precious to him as a new delicacy to Lucille.

"Yes, I understand," she managed to murmur; then she was able to look up. "It's all so immense!" she added. "Your ideas about war seem to be a great deal changed," he hinted casually.

"As I expressed them at the hotel you mean?" she exclaimed. "That seems ages ago—ages!" The perplexity and indecision that, in a space of silence, brooded in the depths of her eyes came to the surface in wavering lights. "Yes, ages ago!" The wavering lights grew dim with a kind of horror and she looked away fixedly at a given point.

He was conscious of a thrill, the thrill that always presaged victory for him. He realized her evident distress; he guessed that terrible pictures were moving before her vision.

"You see, I have been very much stirred up," she said half apologetically. "There are some questions I want to ask—quite practical, selfish questions. You might call them questions of property and mercy. The longer the war lasts the greater will be the loss of life and the misery."

"Yes, for both sides; and the heavier the expense and the taxes."

"If you win, then we shall be under your flag and pay taxes to you?"

"Yes, naturally."

"The Browns do not increase in population; the Grays do rapidly. They are a great, powerful, civilized race. They stand for civilization!"

"Yes, facts and the world's opinion agree," he replied. Puzzled he might well be by this peculiar catechism. He could only continue to reply until he should see where she was leading.

"And your victory will mean a new frontier, a new order of international relations and a long peace, you think? Peace—a long peace?"

Was there ever a soldier who did not fight for peace? Was there ever a call for more army-corps, or guns that was not made in the name of peace? He had his ready argument, spoken with the forcible conviction of an expert.

"This war was made for peace—the only kind of peace that there can be," he said. "My ambition, if any glory comes to me out of this war, is to have later generations say, 'He brought peace.'"

Though the premier, could he have heard this, might have smiled, even grinned, he would have understood Westerling's unconsciousness of inconsistency. The chief of staff had set himself a task in victory which had no military connection. Without knowing why, he wanted to win ascendancy over her mind.

"The man of action!" exclaimed Marta, her eyes opening very wide, as they would to let in the light when she heard something new that pleased her or gave food for thought. "The man of action, who thinks of an ideal as a thing not of words but as the end of action!"

"Exactly!" said Westerling, sensible of another of her gifts. She could get the essence of a thing in a few words. "When we have won and set another frontier, the power of our nation will be such in the world that the Browns can never afford to attack us," he went on. "Indeed, no two of the big nations of Europe can afford to make war without our consent. We shall be the arbiters of international relations. We shall command peace."

"Yes, the peace of force, of fact! If it could be won in any other way I should not be here on this veranda in command of an army of invasion. That was my idea—for that I planned." He was making up for having overshoot himself in his confession that he had brought on the war as a final step for his ambition.

"You mean that you can gain peace by propaganda and education only when human nature has so changed that we can have law and order and houses are safe from burglary and pedestrians from pickpockets without policemen? Is that it?" she asked.

"Yes, yes! You have it! You have found the wheat in the chaff!"

"Perhaps because I have been seeing something of human nature—the human nature of both the Browns and the Grays at war. I have seen the Browns throwing hand grenades and the Grays in wanton disorder in our dining room directly they were out of touch with their officers!" she said sadly as one who hates to accept disillusionment but must in the face of logic.

Westerling made no reply except to nod, for a movement on her part occupied him. She leaned forward, as she had when she had told him he would become chief of staff; her hands clasped over her knees her eyes busy with a question. It was the attitude of the prophet. But with the prophecy she had been a little wavering; the fire in her eyes had precipitated an idea. Now it forged another question.

she asked "You think that you will win?" she repeated with the slow emphasis which demands a careful answer.

The deliberateness of his reply was in keeping with her mood. He was detached, he was a referee.

"Yes, I know that we shall. Numbers make it so, though there be no choice of skill between the two sides."

His tone had the confidence of the flow of a mighty river in its destination on its way to the sea. There was nothing in it of prayer, of hope, of desperation, as there had been in Lanstron's "We shall win!" spoken to her in the arbor at their last interview. She drew forward slightly in her chair. Her eyes seemed much larger and nearer to him. They were sweeping him up and down as if she were seeing the slim figure of Lanstron in contrast to Westerling's sturdiness, as if she were measuring the might of the five millions behind him and the three millions behind Lanstron. She let go a half-whispered "Yes!" which seemed to reflect the conclusion gained from the power of his presence.

"Then my mother's and my own interests are with you—the interests of peace are with you!" she declared.

She did not appear to see the sudden, uncontrolled gleam of victory in his eyes. By this time it had become a habit for Westerling to wait silently for her to come out of her abstractions. To disturb one might make it unproductive.

"Then if I want to help the cause of peace I should help the Grays!"

The exclamation was more to herself than to him. He was silent. This girl in a veranda chair desiring to aid him and his five million bayonets and four thousand guns! Quixote and the windmills—but it was amazing, it was fine! The golden glow of the sunset was running in his veins in a pease of personal triumph. The profile turned over so little. Now it was looking at the point where Dellarme had lain dying. Westerling noted the smile playing on the lips. It had the quality of a smile over a task completed—Dellarme's smile. She started, she was trembling all over in the resistance of some impulse—some impulse that gradually gained headway and at last broke its bonds.

"For I can help—I can help!" she cried out, turning to him in wild indecision which seemed to plead for guidance. "It's so terrible—yet if it would hasten peace—I—I know much of the Browns' plan of defense. I know where they are strong in the first line and—and one place where they are weak there—and a place where they are weak in the main line!"

"You do!" Westerling exploded. The plans of the enemy! The plans that neither Bouchard's saturnine cunning, nor bribes, nor spies could ascertain! It was like the bugle call to the hunter. But he controlled himself. "Yes, yes!" He was thoughtful and guarded.

"Do you think it is right to tell?" Marta gasped half inarticulately.

"Right? Yes, to hasten the inevitable—to save lives!" declared Westerling with deliberate assurance.

"I—I want to see an end of the killing!" She sprang to her feet as if about to break away tumultuously, but paused, away unsteadily, and passed her hand across her eyes.

"We intend a general attack on the first line of defense tonight!" he exclaimed, his supreme thought leaping into words.

"And you would want the information?"

"I Want to See an End of the Killing."

on about the first line to night—It is to be of service?"

"Yes, to night!"

Marta brought her hands together in a tight clasp. Her gaze fluttered for a minute over the tea table. When she looked up her eyes were calm.

"It is a big thing, isn't it?" she said.

"A thing not to be done in an impulse."

"I try never to do big things in an impulse. When I see that I am in danger of it I always say, 'Go by yourself and think for half an hour!' So I must now. In a little while I will let you know my decision."

Without further formality she arose, crossed the lawn to the terrace steps, Westerling watched her saunter, passing along the path of the second terrace, passing slowly, hesitantly, until she was out of sight. Then he stood for a time gazing a grip on his own emotions before he went into the house.

GIVE LAVISHLY TO CHARITY

Londoners Can Not Truthfully Be Accused of Stinginess, at Least in One Respect.

London is rich in charities, as well as in many other things. Ten million pounds is the estimated income of charities in London, which is more than twice the annual expenditure of £4,000,000 on poor relief. This interesting fact is mentioned in London Statistics, a volume which contains many curious facts regarding the metropolis.

It is pointed out, for instance, that of the 67,137 old age pensioners in London, 46,524 are women. This preponderance of women is partly explained by the fact that widows in the whole of London number 199,896. In London, by the way, has the largest number of bachelors, 90,072, and Wandsworth the most spinsters, 99,289.

Referring again to London's charities, it is interesting to note that over nine and a half million meals were given to necessitous children in 1912, each child receiving an average of just over five meals. More than seven and a half million books are lent by the public libraries in a year, juveniles taking considerably over one million.

That Londoners take full advantage of the facilities for amusement is illustrated by the fact that at least one and a half million people visit a theater, music hall, cinema show, or concert hall in London every week.

Crime still flourishes, the number of persons tried for indictable offenses ranging from 9,000 to 10,000.

Among other interesting facts contained in the volume referred to are the figures regarding traffic. Altogether there are 2,192 miles of streets in the metropolis, of which 150 miles are laid with tram lines. The busiest spot in London would appear to be Piccadilly, east of Berkeley street, where 21,745 vehicles, of which 21,612 were motor driven, pass along it in 12 hours. London bridge is the busiest bridge with 17,253 vehicles in the same time, but Westminster bridge with 17,204 vehicles runs it very close.

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

Sage Tea and Sulphur Turns Gray, Faded Hair Dark and Glossy.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray, also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Weyth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy." You will get a large bottle for about 50 cents. Everybody uses the old, famous recipe because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time, by morning the gray hair disappears and after another application, or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

A Mistaken Idea

Many people are of the opinion that unless Olive Oil is imported it is not good. This is a mistaken idea. In foreign countries people who grow Olives have very small holdings of one or two acres. The mills for the manufacture of Olive Oil are of necessity situated a long distance from the orchards, which is plainly apparent from the fact that Spain produces much more oil for mechanical than for edible purposes.

SYLMAR OLIVE OIL retains all the rich fruit flavor of Superior California Olives and is sold under $1,000.00 guarantee of purity.

FLA. AND COMMON LABORERS

Georgia State Law Says They Are, While President Tender of National League Says No.

Are ball players common laborers? That is the latest question that is agitating the fans. If you ask the players themselves such a question (you know they all have plenty of artistic temperament) they will probably be insulted. Says Detroit Journal Warrants are now out for a Federal league scout who is said to have tried to entice players of the Valdosta and Waycross teams of the Georgia state league to jump. Pres James Sinclair at whose request the warrants were issued, invoked the George contract labor law, which was passed to prevent anybody from tampering with laborers under contract. They may consider ball players laborers down south (and you can't wonder that they do when men go out to the ball park and toll in the boiling sun day after day when they might be cooling themselves off in the shade of the magnolia trees, but President Tener of the National league doesn't think so. "Baseball players are neither miners, hot carriers nor ditch diggers," declares the National boss and governor of Pennsylvania, "baseball players are professional men and professional men do not strike. "European War Special" is a good real showing the German army in the field and London in wartime.

President John K. Tener.

"Little Miss Bonny" is a pretty story at the Globe this evening.

"The Saving Presence" is an interesting film shown at the Globe this evening. The story is laid in a manufacturing town and deals with questions that arise between workman and employer.

"The Girl Sophie" is a humorous story of two German musicians in a western town and the way they were received.

"SACRIFICE OF PAULINE" AT OPERA HOUSE TONIGHT

"The Sacrifice of Pauline" is an interesting and real feature at the opera house this evening. The story is filled with thrilling scenes and moves with rapid action, plot and counter plot following each other with growing interest. The film is well acted and well worth seeing.

"A Neighborly Quibble" is a lighter comedy at the opera house this evening. The quartet is quite a feat but lacks a little to make it a serious affair. The humor is about it in the way matter were adjudged.

INFANTILE PARALYSIS CURE NEAR, DR. FLEXNER HINTS

Reports Finding of Germ of Disease That Makes Cripples.

Hope of a cure for infantile paralysis, a disease that has baffled the medical profession for years, is held out by Dr. Simon Flexner, director of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research.

Dr. Flexner explains that through animal experimentation the micro organism of the disease, heretofore invisible even with the aid of the most powerful microscopes and extremely difficult to grow outside the human body, has finally been grown in test tubes and is found visible when viewed through the microscope in mucus. He makes no definite promise but he leaves the distinct impression that recent experiment with this minute germ will soon produce results of a most important character.

Research work concerning the disease has been in progress at the Rockefeller Institute for about six years. Results at first were similar to those in other laboratories, where the virulent agent eluded primary microscopic detection. But the ample means at the command of Dr. Flexner enabled him to pursue the work beyond the stage at which it had blocked others.

Infant paralysis is spread in many ways. The common housefly is an active carrier of it. Bedbugs and fleas distribute it. Human and other carriers have been found which do not themselves suffer from the disease, but which appear to exhale the tiny organisms and thus infect susceptible persons with whom they come in contact.

The disease has appalling power to produce deformities.

RAILROAD NEWS

Items of Interest, Gathered Here and There, For The Boys Who Man The Trains

MILEAGE RATE NOT TO BE SUSPENDED TODAY

Increases of one quarter cent per mile in the cost of railway mileage books will become effective on October 1. The tariff proposing an advance will not be suspended by the interstate commerce commission but may be investigated later while effective.

Ever since the filing by the railroads during the latter part of August of tariffs proposing an increase in the cost of mileage books much interest throughout the country has been manifested in the attitude the commission might take toward the advance. The railway officials generally announced that the action of the commission in the five per cent advance rate case, which held the passenger fares on railways generally were inadequate, and that the roads will be justified in increasing them.

Tariffs filed in August proposed an advance of one fourth of a cent a mile in the cost of mileage books on roads that were charging the public only two cents a mile for mileage transportation. Protests against the increase were made to the commission both by individuals and by organizations, but despite the objection it is the intention of the commission to permit the increase to go into effect. It is expected that after the advance shall have become effective formal complaint will be filed against the increase and that the matter then will be threshed out before the committee.

After Platform Riders

The Pennsylvania Railroad company has written letters to the general managers and superintendents of the larger Pittsburgh industries asking them to post notices warning employees against the dangers of standing on the platform of moving trains. This action is a part of a campaign adopted by the company to reduce the number of accidents due to this habit. The following letter is posted on the bulletin boards of the Pittsburgh Division:

"Your attention is called to the fact that concerted effort on the part of every trainman is necessary at once to keep passengers from riding on platforms or steps of cars between or approaching stations.

"A letter has been sent to all industries requesting that all employees be warned of the danger of violations of the rules for safety by riding on platforms.

"This practice, now common, will be broken up by concerted action alone. If, in any case, assistance in enforcing the rule is desired, you will report to this office at once."

Freight Increase Suspended

Proposed increases in the freight rates on lumber from points of origin in the south of Ohio river transfer points and beyond railroad generally in southern territory Tuesday were suspended by the interstate commerce commission until January 1, 1915.

SOCIAL

Mrs. James Sasserman was very pleasantly surprised Monday evening when about 20 of her friends and neighbors gathered at her home on Clearfield street to celebrate her birthday. During the evening delightful music was rendered by Mrs. Gray Miller and Mrs. Paul Spackman. The refreshments were plentiful and delicious, among them being a large birthday cake baked and decorated by her son Paul Spackman. When the clock approached the hour of midnight the guests departed, leaving their best wishes for many more happy birthdays.

LOW TAXES IN DRY TOWNS

According to the Presbyterian Board of Temperance, the comptroller of the state of California, by his report of 1912, shows the following tax rates:

Wet Towns.
Oakland	$1.75
Stockton	1.62
Bakersfield	1.71
Santa Rosa	1.35
Monterey	1.45
Marystown	1.80
Eureka	1.10
Ferndale	1.30
Blue Lake	1.25
Arcata	.97
Average	$1.43

Dry Towns.
Berkley	$.97
Salina	1.11
Big Beach	1.30
Santa Anna	1.20
San Diego	1.25
San Jose	.95
Woodland	1.26
San Geronimo	1.20
National City	1.10
Fortuna	1.26
Average	$1.25

The above figures include the bonded debts of the cities. Subtracting these debts, which are usually for permanent improvements, the average of the above cities is:

FOR THE 10 WET TOWNS.....$1.10

FOR THE 10 DRY TOWNS.....$.89

Official figures of all license and no license cities in Massachusetts for twenty-five years show that, with a slightly lower average tax rate, the no-license cities:

Had 8 per cent smaller debt.
Spent 22 per cent less for police.
Spent 48 per cent less for property.
Spent 25 per cent more for good streets.
Spent 41 per cent more for education.
Increased 66 per cent more in taxable property.
Increased 79 per cent more in industry.
Increased 90 per cent more in population.

Ostrich Plumes and Fancy Feathers

NOTHING is so noticeable in the most elegant millinery prepared for the fall season as ostrich feathers. Short, broad plumes and tips lead in popularity. After them ostrich feathers developed in fancy forms have demonstrated the ingenuity of manufacturers in copying flower forms and in originating all sorts of new decorations. This fancy ostrich is to take the place of prohibited aligettes, much to the satisfaction of all right-thinking people. America having taken the initiative in doing away with the aligette, French and other designers have replaced it with ostrich and other fancy feathers quite as airy and beautiful.

Many of the new shapes are wide-brimmed, and wide brims always mean long and short plumes. Three hats are shown here in which the use of ostrich plumes in the best of mountings may be studied. It will be seen that one may use a single plume of medium length, or two long plumes, or many short ones, with equally artistic effect. But for some time the simplest forms of trimming have characterized the work of the greatest designers, and a single plume of finest quality mounted on a velvet hat leaves nothing to be desired in the way of art and elegance.

This plume is mounted on the underbrim, and its full, broad end, or "head," falls across the hair and back of the head.

The beautiful picture hat, having a wreath of ostrich tips about its brim, with ends curling upward toward the crown, is finished with a half plume on the band and underbrim at the left. To add any further trimming to this model would be as foolish as adorning the lily or painting the rose.

A wide-brimmed hat, in which a single magnificent plume is mounted on the crown at the right side, is most original and daring in its use of ostrich. The end of the plume is cut off at the beginning of the flues. The plume is laid upon the crown and sewed down in two places. It is left free to curl and curve at its own sweet and graceful will. A narrow band of handsome moire ribbon, tied in the simplest of bows at the left side, finishes the hat. In this model the body of the hat amounts to simply a setting for the plume, which is featured by the manner in which it is placed.

Ostrich plumes and tips in fine quality make a good investment because no matter what the vagaries of fashion they are never "out."

WAR MAPS FOR PROGRESS READERS

Valuable Aids to Understanding of European Situation

A HANDSOME PIECE OF WORK

With These Maps the Public Can Tell at a Glance the Location of the Cities and Towns Where the Belligerent Nations are Struggling for Supremacy—How Maps May be Procured.

In keeping with its determination to give the readers of the Progress the latest and best news of the great European war, the management of this paper has decided to distribute to the public at a nominal cost to the people an official map of the territory in which the big armies of the warring powers are fighting. With the aid of this map the citizen can trace accurately the movements of the armies and discover the scenes of the most important battles of the war.

The map is large, is printed in two colors, with the names and locations of the towns and cities, and is a valuable aid to the understanding of the situation in the war zone. The map was originally made in Europe by the war office, at once, extensive and complete, and has been reproduced in this country on copperplate. The type is clear and the plates, bought by the war office, are after information regarding the war are plainly marked. On the back of this map is to be found the latest and most authentic information regarding the nations now engaged in the conflict.

The Progress has been able to procure a number of these maps for distribution to those who wish to have an intelligent conception of the great events which are happening in Europe. To secure one of these maps the reader will cut the coupon from another page of this paper and present it, with ten cents, at the counter of the business office of the Progress and one of the maps will be handed to him. As the number of copies of the map which the Progress was able to get is limited it will be well for those who wish copies to call early.

The maps will be sent by mail either in town or out of town for 12 cents in coin, stamps or money order. They are really the most valuable maps of Europe that are in existence, and will prove a source of profit to those who wish to learn more than they know of the countries across the sea. If you wish to keep posted on the war, get one of these maps at once.

Now in the greatest need of the war zone.

70,000 HINDUS REINFORCE THE ALLIES

INDIAN TROOPS HAVE BEEN WITH THE BRITISH SINCE TUESDAY

Landed at Marseilles and Their Presence Kept Secret Until Today

COOPERATING NORTH OF THE AISNE RIVER

Arrival of These Troops Was Welcomed by the Allies—Vigorous Offensive Movements of the Allied Troops on Both Flanks of the Germans Continued—Report That the Kaiser's Soldiers Are Showing Signs of Weakening, But They Make Fierce Counter Attacks—The Twentieth Day of the Great Battle Finds Both Armies in About the Same Positions as When the Fighting Started.

(By International News Service)

Paris, Oct. 1.—It was announced here this morning that 70,000 Hindu troops are participating in the battle on the river Aisne, where fierce fighting has been going on for twenty days, with variable results.

The arrival of these Indian troops has been kept a secret by the war department, but it is now stated that the Hindus arrived on Tuesday. It is believed that these fresh troops are cooperating with the British north of the Aisne river near its confluence with the Oise river. The Hindus disembarked at Marseilles.

Vigorous Offensive Movement.

Reports from the scene of strife this morning were to the effect that the allies are keeping up their vigorous offensive movements against the Germans on both flanks.

The arrival of these Indian troops the allies to relieve some of their troops who have been under terrific fire for the past twenty days in the worst battle the world has ever known.

Germans Growing Exhausted.

The Germans continue their counter attacks, but it is said they are showing signs of great exhaustion.

The people of Paris are growing impatient because of the meagerness of the battle issued by the war department and demand that they be given fuller news of the battle.

French Report Progress.

It was officially stated this afternoon: "There is no modification of the situation as a whole. We have progressed on our left north of the River Somme and on our right in the southern part of the Woëvre region."

No Signs of the End.

Battle Front (By way of Paris), Oct. 1.—Yesterday was the nineteenth day of continued hard fighting along the 150-mile front from the Somme to the Moselle and yet there is no definite indication that the historic battle is nearing a finish. There are, however, evidences that the Germans are receding before a forcible and sustained pushing from the allied armies, especially on their western and eastern wings, while the center, where the Germans are more strongly entrenched than at any other point with heavy artillery, remains almost stationary.

German Wings Folding Back.

The German wings appear to be folding back on the center, leaving the sole loophole for a backward movement by way of Rethel.

The Germans' main supply base at Juniville, which is protected by heavy masses of troops, as it is absolutely essential that this place shall be held for the re-equipping of the German armies in Northwestern France, appears to be placed in a somewhat precarious situation with its single line of railroad.

German Ships Fire on Russian Harbor Works

(By International News Service) Petrograd, Oct. 1.—The navy ministry announced that on September 23, a German fleet of 10 ships appeared off Windau, but was prevented from landing forces by the Russian coast guard. The ships then withdrew, but the next day two cruisers returned, opening fire on the harbor works, killing a number of soldiers and civilians but were again driven off.

LOCAL POSTOFFICE FORCE COUNTING MAIL MATTER

Beginning today the employees of the Clearfield postoffice will, for the first thirty days coming, piece and weigh all mail passing through the local office. This work covers all mail received and delivered in the town and on the rural routes, in all four classes.

For seven days the postoffice force will count all mail dropped into the local office, making records of all the pieces and the amount of postage required on the pieces. It is believed that this order of the post office department is to ascertain information relative to the proposed reduction of postage.

The task before the local employees is a big one to the proposed reduction of postage.

The task before the local employees is a big one and may cause some delay in the distribution and delivery of mail, but Postmaster Martin hopes that the delay will only be slight.

The postmaster has received instruction to ascertain how many people are complying with the rule of the department requiring all house holders to have mail boxes at their homes or slots in their doors for the reception of mail. It is found that fully fifty per cent. of the citizens of Clearfield do not have these conveniences, and as the department is likely to issue an order prohibiting carriers to deliver mail at homes where there are no boxes or slots it behooves the citizens to get busy and provide a place.

Carriers lose much valuable time delivering mail where there are no boxes or slots.

PLACE NOW FULL OF REFUGEES

Panic-Stricken People Rushing to New Capital in Dread of Being Punished by the Angry Germans—Fully Prepared for the Zeppelin Airships.

(By International News Service)

Antwerp, Belgium, October 1st.—An Englishwoman, Miss Louise Mack, a well known writer of fiction, has written the following vivid description of this ancient seaport in wartime. Antwerp again has won the spot-light in this war. The town has become the haven of thousands of refugees, Belgians, British and Americans. The capital of Belgium was transferred here from Brussels, and German Zeppelins brought the city into prominence by bombarding it from the skies at night. Miss Mack writes: "Slowly, painfully, through the blazing summer day, our huge brown train goes creeping toward Antwerp. Antwerp? The name has grown into an emblem of hope in these sad days, when the Belgians are fleeing for their lives from their homes among flat green pastures, fleeing towards their own fortified city that we English know as Antwerp, or else directing their desperate, headlong flights to the feeble peace and security of the far off and mysterious Angleterre."

CORRECTION OF REPORT OF FLOWER COMMITTEE

An unfortunate mixup of types in yesterday's report of the meeting of the Woman's club made unintelligible that paragraph relating to the report of the flower growing committee, and in order to give our readers an idea of what was intended to be said the paragraph as originally written is here given:

In reviewing the activities of the club for the past year the members feel that their efforts have borne fruit. The report of the flower committee was gratifying and this work will be continued next year. The purpose of the committee is to arouse greater interest in flower growing, which will gradually increase until the beautifying of the whole town will be the result.

Austria Apologizes to Italy

(By International News Service)

Rome, Oct. 1.—It is officially announced that Austria has apologized to Italy for the presence of mines near the Italian coast, in Adriatic, and has expressed regret for the sinking of Italian ships, promising to remove the mines and pay damages to the victims.

Austria's action it is believed, averted a crisis that would have led to war if Vienna had not heeded Italy's protest. Indemnity estimates range between a half and one million dollars.

DAVID PHILLIPS SLOWLY RECOVERING FROM INJURIES

David Phillips, of Faunee, was in Clearfield yesterday. Mr. Phillips is the young man who was so terribly injured by an explosion in the city mine at Faunee on June 16 last, receiving wounds which left him in a bad physical condition. He has not been able to work, since the accident.

Mr. Phillips declares that he was not responsible for the explosion, as was stated at the time. He was regarded as one of the most careful employees of Harrison, Walker & Co. and received his injuries through the carelessness of another miner. His head and face were terribly shattered and he lost the sight of one eye. The frontal bone on the left side of his head was fractured and the brain escaped injury by a very close shave. At present Mr. Phillips is still suffering from his wounds but his mind is recovering its old-time functions.

Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Thorn and daughter Gussie will motor to Williamsport tomorrow. Mr. and Mrs. Thorn will spend the rest of the week with friends, returning Sunday, and Miss Gussie will spend the next week with Miss Mary Connelly, who is spending the winter in Williamsport.

(By International News Service) London, Oct. 1.—The fall of Antwerp is believed to be imminent. Despite the strength of the fortifications around the city the Germans' renewal of the bombardment with 42 centimeter siege guns leads military experts to believe that the reduction of the Antwerp works is inevitable.

King May Fly to England. There is a conviction here that King Albert is preparing to flee to England if Antwerp shows signs of falling before the German attack.

A fearful rain of shells is pouring into the southern forts and it is expected that they will soon be destroyed or captured.

The German infantry is furiously attacking the Belgian army, which is doing all it can to defend the city.

Desperate Resistance. Antwerp, Oct. 1.—German operations near Antwerp are increasing in scope and intensity of attack. They are meeting with desperate resistance on the part of the Belgians.

Malines has been recaptured by the Belgians.

The Germans yesterday renewed the bombardment of Liège (a manufacturing town nine miles southeast of Antwerp) and Heyst-Op-Den-Berg (a town near Liège).

Church and Convent Struck. To Liège the tower of the church of St. Gommarius, the convent of the Blanc Sisters and some houses have been hit.

The Million Dollar Mystery

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Illustrated from Scenes in the Photo Drama of the Same Name by the Thanhouser Film Company

(Copyright, 1914, by Harold MacGrath)

"What, Norton?"
"Yes. The trouble is with you, you have been so successful all these years that you have grown overconfident. I tell you that there is a desperately shrewd man somewhere back of all this. Mark me, I do not believe Hargrave is dead. He is in hiding. It may be near by. He may have dropped from the balloon before it left land. The man they picked up may be Oris, the aeronaut. The five thousand might have been his fee for rescuing Hargrave. Here is the greatest thing we've ever been up against; and you start in with every day methods!"
"Little woman, don't let your tongue run away with you too far."
"I'm not the least bit afraid of you, Leo. You read me, and it has never been more apparent than at this moment."

"All right. I fell by the wayside this trip. Truthfully, I realized it five minutes after the men were gone. The only clever thing I did was to keep the mask on my face. They can't come back at me. But the thing looked so easy; and it would have worked but for Norton's appearance."

"You all but compromised me. That butler worries me a little." Her expression lost its anger and grew thoughtful. "He's always about somewhere. Do you think Hargrave took him into his confidence?"

"Can't tell. He's been watched straight for 40 hours. He hasn't mailed a letter or telephoned to any place but the grocery. There have been no telegrams. Some one in that house knows where the money is, and it's ten to one that it will be the girl."

"She looks enough like Katrina to be her ghost."

Braine went over to the window and stared up at the stars.

"You have made a good impression on the girl?" with his back still toward her.

"I had her in my arms."

"Olga, my hat is off to you," turning, now that his face was again in repose. "Your very frankness regarding your relationship will pull the wool over their eyes. Of course they'll make inquiries and they'll find out that you haven't lied. It's perfect. Not even that newspaper weasel will see anything wrong. Toward you they will eventually ease up and you can act without their even dreaming your part in the business. We must not be seen in public any more. This butler may know where I stand even though he cannot prove it. Now, I'm going to tell you something. Perhaps you've long since guessed it. Katrina was mine till Hargrave—never mind what his name was then—till Hargrave came into the fold. So sure of her was I that I used her as a lure to bring him to us. She fell in love with him, but too late to warn him. I had the satisfaction of seeing him cast her aside, curse her, and leave her. In no time she fooled us all. I never knew of the child till you told me."

He paused to light a cigarette.

"Hargrave was madly in love with her. He cursed her, but he came back to the house to forgive her, to find that she had been seized by the secret police and entombed in the fortress. I had my revenge. It was I who sent in the information, practically bogus. But in Russia they never question; they act and forget. So he had a daughter!"

He began pacing the floor, his hands behind his back; and the woman watched him, oscillating between love and fear. He came to a halt abruptly and looked down at her.

"Don't worry. You have no rival. I'll leave the daughter to your tender mercies."

"The butler," she said, "has full powers of attorney to act for Hargrave while absent, up to the day the girl becomes of legal age."

"I'll keep an eye on our friend Jones. From now on, day and night, there will be a cat at the knothole, and 'ware mouse! Could you make up anything like this girl?" suddenly.

"A fair likeness."

"Do it. Go to the ship which picked up the man at sea and quiz the captain. Either the aviator or Hargrave is alive. It is important to learn which at once. Be very careful; play the game only as you know how to play it. And if Hargrave is alive, we win. Tomorrow morning, early. Tears are easy when a woman weeps. No color, remember; just the yellow wig and the salient features. Now, by-by!"

"Aren't you going to kiss me, Leo?"

He caught her hands. "There is a species of Delilah about you, Olga. A kiss tonight from your lips would snip my locks; and I need a clear head. Whether we fail or win, when this game is played you shall be my wife." He kissed the hands and strode out into the hall.

The woman gazed down at her small white hands and smiled tenderly. (The fortress has her tender moments!) He meant it!

She went into her dressing room and for an hour or more worked over her face and hair, till she was certain that if the captain of the ship described her to anyone else he could not fail to give a fair description of Florence Hargrave.

But Norton reached the captain first. Other reporters had besieged him, but they had succeeded in gathering the vaguest kind of information. They had no description of Hargrave, while Norton had. Before going down to the boat, however, he had delved into the past of the Princess Olga Perigoff. It cost him a pocketful of money, but the end justified the means. The princess had no past worth mentioning. By giving this and that together he became assured that she had told the simple truth regarding the relationship of a Florence's mother. A cablegram given him all the facts in her history were no gaps or discrepancies. It read clear and frank. Trust a Russian secret agent to know what he was talking about.

So Norton's suspicions—and he had entertained some—were completely lulled to sleep. And he wouldn't have doubted her at all except for the fact that Braine had been with her when he had introduced Hargrave. Hargrave had feared Braine; that much the reporter had elicited from the butler. But there wasn't the slightest evidence. Braine had been in New York for nearly six years. The princess had arrived in the city but a year gone. And Braine was a member of several fashionable clubs, never touched cards, and seldom drank. He was an expert chess player and a wonderful amateur billiardist. Perhaps Jones, the taciturn and inscrutable, had not told him all he knew regarding his master's past. Well, well; he had in his time untangled worse snarls. The office had turned him loose, a free lance, to handle the case as he saw fit, to turn in the story when it was complete.

But what a story it was going to be when he cleared it up! The more mystifying it was, the greater the zest and sport for him. Norton was like a gambler who played for big stakes, and only big stakes stirred his cravings.

The captain of the tramp steamer Orient told him the same tale he had told the other reporters; he had picked up a man at sea. The man had been brought aboard totally exhausted.

"Was there another body any where?"

"No."

"What became of him?"

"I sent a wireless and that seemed to bother him. It looked so that he did not want anybody to learn that he had been rescued. The moment the boat touched the pier he lost himself in the crowd. Fifty reporters came aboard, but he was gone. And I could not tell them just what I'm telling you."

"He had money."

"About five thousand."

"Please describe him."

The captain did so. It was the same description he had given to all the reporters. Norton looked over the rail at the big warehouse.

"Was it an ordinary balloon?"

"There you've got me. My Marconi man says the balloon part was like any other balloon; but the passenger car was a new business to him. It could be driven against the wind."

"Driven against the wind. Did you tell this to the other chaps?"

"Don't think I did. Just remembered it. Probably some new invention; and now it's at the bottom of the sea. Two men, as I understand it, went off in this contraption. One is gone for good."

"For good," echoed the reporter gravely. "Gone for good, indeed, poor devil! Norton took out a roll of bills. 'There's two hundred in this roll.'"

"Well," said the captain, vastly astonished.

"It's yours if you will do me a small favor."

"If it doesn't get me mixed up with the police, I'm only captain of a tramp; and some of the harbor police have taken a dislike to me. What do you want me to do?"

"The police will not bother you. This man Hargrave had some enemies; they want either his life or his money; maybe both. It is a peculiar case, with Russia in the background. He might have laid the whole business before the police, but he chose to fight it out himself. And to tell the truth, I don't believe the police would have done any good."

"Leave her over; what do you want me to do for that handsome roll of money?"

"If any man or woman who is not a reporter comes to pump you tell them the man went ashore with a packet under his arm."

"Tie a knot in that."

"Say that the man was gray haired, clean shaven, straight, with a scar high up on his forehead, generally covered up by his hair."

"That's battened down, my lad. Go on."

"Say that you saw him enter yonder warehouse, and later depart without his packet."

"Easy as groping my mudhook."

"That's all," Norton gave the captain the money. "Good-by and many thanks."

"Don't mention it."

Norton left the slip and proceeded to the office of the warehouse. He approached the manager's desk.

"Hello, Granis, old top!"

The man looked up from his work surlily. Then his face brightened.

"Norton? What's brought you here?"

O, yes; that balloon business. Sit down."

"What kind of a man is the captain of that old hooker in the slip?"

"Shifty in gun running, but otherwise as square as a die. Looks funny to see an old tub like that fixed up with wireless; but that has saved his neck a dozen times when he was running it into a noose. Not going to interview me, are you?"

"No. I'm going to ask you to do me a little favor."

"They always say that. But spin her out. If it doesn't cost me my job, it's yours."

"Well, there will be a person making inquiries about the mysterious aeronaut. All I want you to say is, that he left a packet with you, that you've put it in that safe till he calls to claim it."

Granis nibbled the end of his pen. "Suppose some one should come and demand that I open the safe and deliver?"

"All you've got to do is to tell them to show the receipt signed by you."

The warehouse manager laughed. "Got a lot of sense in that ivory dome of yours. All right. But if anything happens you've got to come around and back me up. What's it about?"

"That I dare not tell you. This much, I'm laying a trap and I want some one I don't know to fall into it."

"On your way, James. But if you don't send me some prize fight tickets next week for this, I'll never do you another favor."

In reply Norton took from his pocket two bits of pasteboard and laid them on the desk. "I knew you'd be wanting something like this."

"Ringside!" cried Granis. "You reporters are lucky devils!"

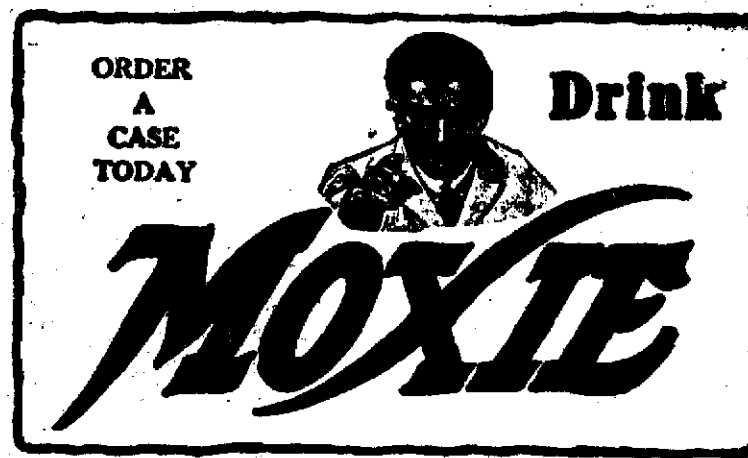

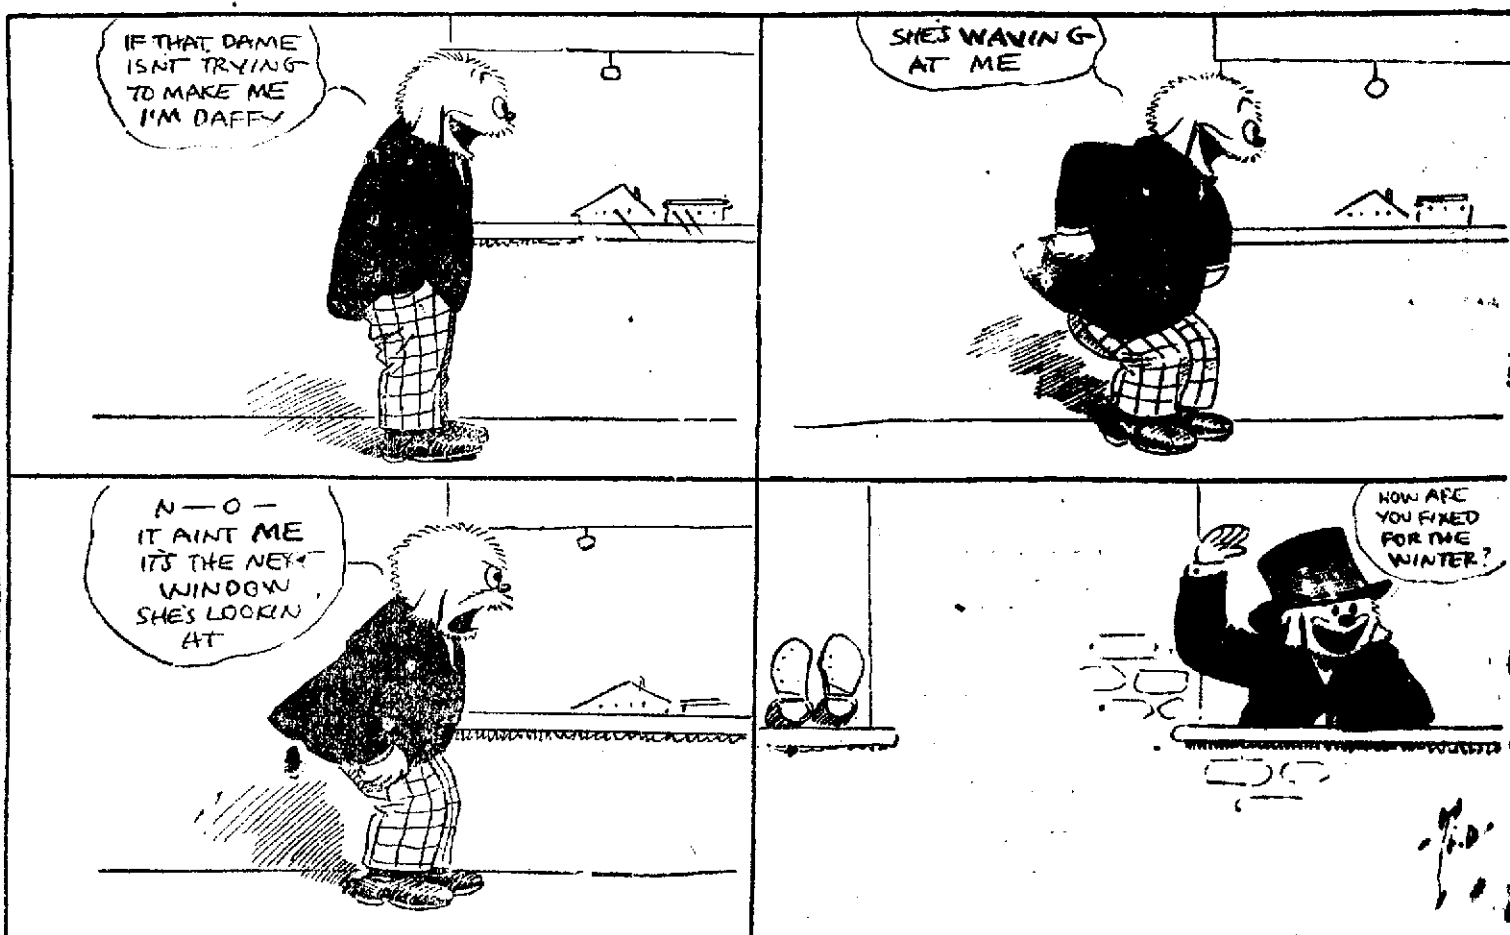

"I'd go myself if there was any earthly chance of a real scrap. You make me laugh, Gran. You're always going, always hoping the next one will be a real one. But it's all bunk. The pugs are the biggest fakers on top the sod. They've got us newspaper men done to a frazzle."

"No."
"What became of him?"
"I sent a wireless and that seemed to bother him. It looked so that he did not want anybody to learn that he had been rescued. The moment the boat touched the pier he lost himself in the crowd. Fifty reporters came aboard, but he was gone. And I could not tell them just what I'm telling you."

"Well," said the captain, vastly astonished.
"It's yours if you will do me a small favor."
"If it doesn't get me mixed up with the police, I'm only captain of a tramp; and some of the harbor police have taken a dislike to me. What do you want me to do?"
"The police will not bother you. This man Hargrave had some enemies; they want either his life or his money; maybe both. It is a peculiar case, with Russia in the background. He might have laid the whole business before the police, but he chose to fight it out himself. And to tell the truth, I don't believe the police would have done any good."
"Leave her over; what do you want me to do for that handsome roll of money?"
"If any man or woman who is not a reporter comes to pump you tell them the man went ashore with a packet under his arm."
"Tie a knot in that."
"Say that the man was gray haired, clean shaven, straight, with a scar high up on his forehead, generally covered up by his hair."
"That's battened down, my lad. Go on."
"Say that you saw him enter yonder warehouse, and later depart without his packet."
"Easy as groping my mudhook."
"That's all," Norton gave the captain the money. "Good-by and many thanks."
"Don't mention it."
Norton left the slip and proceeded to the office of the warehouse. He approached the manager's desk.
"Hello, Granis, old top!"
The man looked up from his work surlily. Then his face brightened.
"Norton? What's brought you here?"
O, yes; that balloon business. Sit down."
"What kind of a man is the captain of that old hooker in the slip?"
"Shifty in gun running, but otherwise as square as a die. Looks funny to see an old tub like that fixed up with wireless; but that has saved his neck a dozen times when he was running it into a noose. Not going to interview me, are you?"
"No. I'm going to ask you to do me a little favor."
"They always say that. But spin her out. If it doesn't cost me my job, it's yours."
"Well, there will be a person making inquiries about the mysterious aeronaut. All I want you to say is, that he left a packet with you, that you've put it in that safe till he calls to claim it."
Granis nibbled the end of his pen. "Suppose some one should come and demand that I open the safe and deliver?"
"All you've got to do is to tell them to show the receipt signed by you."
The warehouse manager laughed. "Got a lot of sense in that ivory dome of yours. All right. But if anything happens you've got to come around and back me up. What's it about?"
"That I dare not tell you. This much, I'm laying a trap and I want some one I don't know to fall into it."
"On your way, James. But if you don't send me some prize fight tickets next week for this, I'll never do you another favor."
In reply Norton took from his pocket two bits of pasteboard and laid them on the desk. "I knew you'd be wanting something like this."
"Ringside!" cried Granis. "You reporters are lucky devils!"
"I'd go myself if there was any earthly chance of a real scrap. You make me laugh, Gran. You're always going, always hoping the next one will be a real one. But it's all bunk. The pugs are the biggest fakers on top the sod. They've got us newspaper men done to a frazzle."

$10,000 Will Be Given Away

The Progress has just completed arrangements whereby one of its readers may be lucky enough to win a prize of $10,000. This offer will be found in an announcement on page two, and is run in conjunction with the great serial Photoplay which started at the Globe Theatre, Tuesday evening.

"The Million Dollar Mystery"

By Harold McGrath

Is the name of the play, and it will also run serially in the Progress every Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The first two installments, however, will be run throughout this week.

Tell any of your friends who may not be subscribers, so they may start at once.---Watch for first offer.

Are you reading the great war story now running in the Progress, and are all your friends and neighbors reading it? If not, you had better have the Progress sent to them

"The Last Shot"

By Frederick Palmer

It is one of the greatest war serial ever written, and should not be missed by anyone. It is written by a former war correspondent and is very interesting during the present European war.

And still another treat for our readers is the great serial photoplay

"The Trey O'Hearts"

Which is shown every Wednesday evening at the Opera House, and appears in the Progress every Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. This excellent story is by Louis Joseph Vance and has been called one of the best serials yet.

You can not afford to miss these great features, together with our down-to-the-minute telegraph service, and a good line-up of local and county news which are given you every day in

N. Y. TRIBUNE'S CALL TO PENNSYLVANIA

The New York Tribune, the historic national organ of the Republican party since the days of Greeley, consistent supporter of Republican nominees, and the leading newspaper advocate of the candidacy of Mr. Taft in 1912, prints the following editorial under the caption, "Pennsylvania Should Unite on Pinchot to Defeat Penroseism."

"Mr. Penrose should be beaten. It will be a bad thing for public life in America if the forces which he represents triumph in the Pennsylvania senatorial contest. It will be a ruinous thing for the Republican party if Mr. Penrose and his kind come to the front in it once more."

His defeat will save the state of Pennsylvania from the discredit of unworthy representation in the United States senate. It will stem the tide of reaction of which this victory in the primaries is an ominous sign. And the Republican party will be stronger when it enters the next national campaign with Penrose in the background rather than in the foreground.

The party must keep faith with the public if it is to have any hope of regaining its vigor. It must reject reactionary leadership everywhere and at all times.

This recrudescence of Penrose is a challenge to the progressive element in the Republican party everywhere. There must be no compromise with the forces of reaction. The party's house must be thoroughly cleaned and the party completely reorganized. If a real fight is not made, if drastic steps are not taken, the old machine will be found, as in Pennsylvania, to have profited by the undeniable sawing away from President Wilson and to be as firmly entrenched in power as it was when it brought the party to disruption in 1912.

It is because the issue is so big, so vitally important to the country and to the party, that the Tribune has no sympathy with the cowardly counsels that have prevailed in Pennsylvania and that have enabled Penrose to win his victory at the primaries.

It has been argued there that Penrose represented the best chance of success at the election, that he had the machine and the support of the "interests." Newspapers in Philadelphia which were supposed to stand for independence of the machine have kept silent, either at the bidding of the forces behind Mr. Penrose or for fear of impairing the Republican party's chances.

The selfish interests may profit by Penrose's success, but it will be costly victory for the Republican party which brings him forward as an embodiment of its aims and an index of its character.

The Tribune hopes that Pennsylvania will elect Mr. Gifford Pinchot, the candidate of the Progressive party, as its next senator. He is a worthier candidate than the man chosen at the Democratic primaries. The necessity for defeating Penroseism transcends all partisan consideration. Opposition to it should not be divided. The Democratic candidate ought to withdraw. All citizens, irrespective of party affiliations, should unite in support of Mr. Pinchot.

WAR'S HUGE COST TO SPEED PEACE

Prolonged Struggle Would Be Financial Disaster.

BILLIONS HAVE BEEN SPENT

Nations Involved Believed to Have Thought Conflict Would Be Comparatively Brief—Already Burdened With Old Debts of the Same Kind. Their Industries Paralyzed.

One of the most powerful elements that is at work today for the settlement of the great European war is the appalling cost of the titanic conflict. It can be only a matter of time until every one of the warring powers is embarrassed financially. It is not assuming too much, says the Washington Post, to say that each of the nations, with its great armament, believed that war, when it came, would be of brief duration, that the stupendous cost and the terrible loss of life wrought by modern war machinery would bring any conflict to a quick termination.

The immense war appropriations of the combatants, huge as they are, will be only a mere bagatelle if the war is prolonged. Germany at the outset appropriated $1,250,000,000. France on the same day set aside more than $1,000,000,000.

CALLS ON LABOR MEN TO BEAVER VALLEY SEES REPUDIATE BETRAYERS BIG PINCHOT SENTIMENT

From the Iron City Trades Journal

The working men of this state and particularly the organized workmen never had a more clearer proposition to vote for, or the men for whom they should vote, the coming election. The principal questions, and we say it advisedly, is the workmen's compensation law and child labor law for the candidates on the different tickets are talking about these laws and placing the blame for the lack of these laws where it rightly belongs. The workmen have been informed by the State Federation of Labor through their officials and the legislative committee, who was responsible for the killing of those bills and if they support the same men again then they are to blame, not the politicians. Don't forget, men, that the State Federation of Labor, holding its annual convention in Reading, Pa., in May 1913, adjourned the convention for a day to go in special train to Harrisburg and marched in a body into the state senate and appeared before the senatorial committee and pleaded for those humane laws. Don't forget that your delegated representatives of labor were insulted, sneered and jeered, and don't forget that the Grange had a special trainload of bejeered and silk-gowned women there to influence the senators to not pass a child labor law and they did not. Think of the many maimed and crippled workmen in our state; think of the suffering and hardship endured by the penniless wives and mothers of those unfortunates; think of the little children forced onto the street to beg or sell papers by reason of the fact that these supposed to be honorable men had not the courage or humanity in them to give you a law that would at least help feed the hungry. Men and particularly organized men, who know of these acts, and who committed them, gird on your armor of unbiensism, start and tell your neighbors you have the facts. It is your duty to yourself and family; it is your duty to the state to see to it that not one of the men responsible for the defeat of those worthy bills should be sent back to represent you in any branch of our government. And when the time comes to vote and you are undecided take a look at the crippled father, husband, brother and son; take your little child in your arms, look it in the face, then ask yourself will you vote for men who will not protect the child?

Beaver county took an important part in the great Anti-Saloon meeting in Harrisburg on Thursday, when a demand was made for a consistent line up of the party representing the Anti-Saloon sentiment. Vance McCormick for governor, and Pinchot for United States Senator were endorsed, and the request made for Mr. Palmer to retire in favor of Pinchot. Several persons represented Beaver county, Robert Ritchie, Esq., being secretary of the meeting, and Philip Schunaberger was present from New Brighton. This is one of the most practical moves yet made, and it will doubtless be a powerful factor in the campaign. With McCormick for governor and "Farmer" Creasy for lieutenant governor and Pinchot for senator, we have a combination that carries confidence and influence, and promises to be a winner.—Beaver Valley News.

NOW UP TO PALMER

In politics some things are as easy as others. For example, William Draper Lewis declares his present mission in politics to be to wipe out the Penroseism. Therefore, he resigns from his party ticket and espouses the candidacy of his Democratic opponent. Mr. Palmer declares it to be his chief desire to defeat Penroseism. Why not retire, then, and leave the field to Gifford Pinchot? Mr. Palmer replies that Mr. Pinchot ought to retire. But that is rather ungracious. Turn about is fair play. Because Mr. Lewis withdrew is no reason why our Democratic brethren should ask the Progressives to get off the earth. But there is another reason why Mr. Palmer should withdraw if he is thinking solely of the defeat of Penroseism. We venture to think that if Mr. Pinchot gave way that Mr. Penrose would defeat Mr. Palmer. There is but one man in the state at the present time who could defeat Mr. Penrose. That man is Gifford Pinchot. We believe this to be true whether Mr. Palmer stays in the fight or not. Mr. Palmer thinks Mr. Lewis did a brave thing to advance a cause which both have at heart. There can be very little doubt about the success of that cause if Mr. Palmer followed Dean Lewis' example and made it possible to offer a clean-cut ticket to the voters. Penrose and Pinchot, against Pinchot and Lewis.—Somerset.

ENDROMOUS COST OF NAVIES.

Powers Spent $925,750,000 This Year and $455,160,000 in 1905.

The British admiralty has issued a "White Paper" which shows the great growth of expenditure in naval armaments in the last decade. A comparison of expenditure in 1905 and 1914 shows the following figures:

	1905.	1914.
Britain	£25,000,000	£110,000,000
France	22,000,000	55,000,000
Russia	12,000,000	35,000,000
Germany	21,000,000	22,000,000
Italy	5,000,000	12,000,000
Austria	2,000,000	7,000,000
U.S.A.	2,000,000	20,000,000
Japan	2,500,000	10,000,000

Total £170,220,000 £555,160,000

The personnel of the navies of the great powers now at war is given as follows for the current year: Britain, 151,000; France, 60,000; Russia, 59,427; Germany, 75,000; Austria, 23,000; Japan, 50,000. Of powers not at war the personnel of the navy of the United States is 67,000 and of Italy 40,000.

IMPORTANT DATES.

Home talent show by Clearfield fire company No. 1, opera house, Oct. 12 and 13.

General election, November 3.
Christmas, Friday, December 25.

October 1, 1914.

Good evening! Remember, he who can smile under adverse circumstances is worthy of being classed as a benefactor of mankind.

Patronize the circulating library and help the hospital fund along.

The old-fashioned mother who knew where her boy or girl was at night appears to have died some years ago.

Why don't the anti-Palmer Democrats get up a demonstration to let the other side know they are living?

If congress wants to do something which will please intelligent people let it place a high tax on cigarettes.

The divine command, "Thou shalt not kill," has been expurgated from the bibles used by the rulers of Europe.

Probably Americans have underrated the abilities of Villa and overrated the honesty of Carranza. The latter would not have been known but for Villa.

Still, Palmer would be better able to convince the voters that he is opposed to Penrose's election if he were to withdraw and give Pinchot a chance to defeat Penrose.

There are members of congress who are as ignorant as to who started the European war as is the veriest backwoodsman. King Greed began the mighty conflict.

Local baseball fans will be interested in watching the progress of the world series of games between the Athletics and the Bostonians, and then they can turn their attention to football.

The Fatherland, a periodical which seeks to drum up sympathy for Germany in this war, would make more friends for Germany if it were not for the fact that it cannot tell the truth.

The Woman's club wants to make Clearfield a more beautiful town, which is a laudable ambition, but to make Clearfield a better town morally is a more important problem.

A Norristown man says he can pronounce all the names in which battles have been fought in Europe. Other places need not hope to lay claim to having whiskey to beat that in Norristown.

While the Philadelphia Ledger opposes the election of Penrose it advocates the election of Brumbaugh. Penrose's candidate for governor. Which leads us to wonder if the Ledger ever heard of the word consistency.

A beneficial result might be arrived at if some of those most rabid hyphenated foreigners were put aboard a steamer and started for their fatherlands. This plan would at least put an end to much of the unparliamentary discussion of the war now going on in the columns of some of the newspapers in this country.

We suggest that the naturalization papers of Herman Ridder, of New York, be examined. Surely a man who has fore sworn allegiance to the emperor of Germany would not devote his time and talents to abusing American citizens who take to themselves the right to express their own opinions of the European powers who brought on this horrible war.

ANTI-PENROSE FORCES.

It's as true today as when the saw was first pronounced—a man is known by the company he keeps. In this campaign, in which Senator Penrose seeks re-election to the United States senate, he is surrounded by Republicans of that class which has been designated as stand-patters. These are Republicans who do not care what political offenses a candidate may have committed and are willing to support and vote for such men as Penrose regardless of their past unsavory record.

Senator Penrose is endorsed by the liquor interests of the state, who have always found him willing to advance their interests in the United States senate or in the Pennsylvania legislature, which he owns. The liquor interests are prepared to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars in the effort to elect Penrose and such other candidates as they believe will take care of them in future legislation. The liquor interests see the handwriting on the wall, and they desire to prevent the state of Pennsylvania going dry, which it most probably would do if the people were permitted to vote on the question.

Senator Penrose is supported by the beneficiaries of special privilege. The senator has stood loyally by the side of special privilege and against the common people. His vote in the senate, when he was present to vote, has been in favor of special privilege and against the workingmen. The trusts and combinations are for Penrose because he has been their friend in the past and no doubt has promised to work for the advancement of their interests in the future, if given the chance. The only candidate who is not owned and controlled by the liquor interests and the trusts and combinations is Gifford Pinchot, and his election will give to Pennsylvania a United States senator who would represent all of the people all of the time.

WOMAN'S CLUB JOINS CRUSADE

Clearfield's Woman's club, in thanking Chief of Police McHenry for inaugurating a crusade against vulgarity in this town, has joined the movement which has for its object the breaking up of a very offensive habit into which men and boys have been led through past neglect. With the women and the men who believe that the time is ripe for correcting evils which all know should not exist, the probabilities are that Clearfield will in time be a town in which women and girls may pass along the street without being subjected to offensive stares from young men.

The young men themselves could help very materially to end the reign of vulgarity in Clearfield if they were to reflect that in using vulgar language they stamp themselves as loafers, a title which none of them should desire to have applied to himself. No gentleman uses profane or indecent language, especially in the presence of females. No gentleman stares at women and girls who pass by. The young men who have been guilty of these offenses cannot complain if they are classed as hoodlums, for only a hoodlum will act as some of the young men and boys of Clearfield have been acting in the past. Parents can help very materially in the work of reformation if they will see that their young sons are at home at night, for those boys who stay away from their homes after nine o'clock at night do so with the knowledge and consent of their parents. A curfew law strictly enforced would also be of great aid in keeping off the streets boys and girls of tender age. Clearfield should endeavor to get rid of the odium which attaches to the town through the misconduct of its young boys and girls.

THE STOUGH SERVICES.

Evangelist Stough is in his second week of work in behalf of sinners at DuBois. Nightly large crowds of people attend the Stough services, and his talks are listened to with great attention by all, although some things he says are not as pleasant as sinners would have statements from the pulpit. Dr. Stough is plain spoken. He has the courage of his convictions and hews without regard to where the chips fall. He is doing an immense amount of good, and wherever he goes he leaves behind him evidence of the power of his discourses.

Clearfield people who heard Evangelist Connell in this place last year should be interested in the work of Dr. Stough. There are a whole lot of people in Clearfield who endorse what Dr. Stough says who should express their appreciation of evangelistic work by visiting DuBois and attending the services. Last Sunday a large number of people from Osceola went to DuBois to hear Dr. Stough. Are the people of Clearfield less concerned regarding the spread of the gospel than are those of Osceola and other towns in the county? Why cannot a special train be secured and a crowd of Clearfield people be taken to DuBois to encourage Dr. Stough by their presence?

HELP!

We've written about the lunch counter
We've roasted the boarding house
We've scolded the amateur singer
And said nasty things of her tune.
We've satirized women's apparel,
And been too sarcastic by half.
We've mentioned the horseless piano,
And knocked the poor old phonograph.
We've written about the new baby
And wife's first biscuits we've slammed,
We've pitied the suffragette husband
Whose head with new notions is crammed.

We've ridiculed all politicians,
And caucuses that have been packed
We've said what we could of club women;
The night prowling husband we've whacked.
We've even penned lined to sweet Mary;

To Mary who had the small lamb.
We've also exposed the young hopeful
Who steals to the cupboard for jam
We've harpooned the telephone gossip
The street car conductor as well.
The porters, the coppers, the barbers
And others, too many to tell.

We've searched through the earth, sky and water.
We've verified every unknown pun,
And oft we have reached the conclusion

There's nothing new under the sun.
O list to the wail of the scribbler,
We ask it upon bended knees.
Can't somebody start a new notion?
Won't somebody do something, please?

AMUSEMENTS

This Play a Gem.
"Seven Hours in New York" the big musical show, booked for promises to delight the large audience that usually turns out when anything good comes our way. This play is a gem. The company and chorus of exceedingly pretty girls, are capable. An enjoyable entertainment is promised Friday evening, Oct. 2.

A Fine Drama.

One of the noteworthy events of the dramatic season will be the presentation in play form at New opera house on Tuesday night of Harold Bell Wright's thrilling book of rugged life in the southwest, "The Winning of Barbara W." The dramatization is by Mark Swan and follows closely the theme of the novel, introducing all the characters that are so delightfully remembered by those who have read the novel. Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger equipped the piece for its original appearance at the Studebaker Theatre, Chicago, with a massive and magnificent scenic production, creating in elaborate detail "The Round Top" and "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine." The Chicago production will be seen here Sept. 29 and 30.

The Last Shot

By
FREDERICK PALMER

(Copyright, 1914, by Charles Scribner's Sons)

"The one way to end the feud between the two nations was a war that would mean permanent peace," he explained, seeing how quiet she was and realizing, with a recollection of her children's oath, that he had gone a little too far. He wanted to retain her admiration. It had become as precious to him as a new delicacy to Lucille.

"Yes, I understand," she managed to murmur; then she was able to look up. "It's all so immense!" she added. "Your ideas about war seem to be a great deal changed," he hinted casually.

"As I expressed them at the hotel you mean?" she exclaimed. "That seems ages ago—ages!" The perplexity and indecision that, in a space of silence, brooded in the depths of her eyes came to the surface in wavering lights. "Yes, ages ago!" The wavering lights grew dim with a kind of horror and she looked away fixedly at a given point.

He was conscious of a thrill, the thrill that always presaged victory for him. He realized her evident distress; he guessed that terrible pictures were moving before her vision.

"You see, I have been very much stirred up," she said half apologetically. "There are some questions I want to ask—quite practical, selfish questions. You might call them questions of property and mercy. The longer the war lasts the greater will be the loss of life and the misery."

"Yes, for both sides; and the heavier the expense and the taxes."

"If you win, then we shall be under your flag and pay taxes to you?"

"Yes, naturally."

"The Browns do not increase in population; the Grays do rapidly. They are a great, powerful, civilized race. They stand for civilization!"

"Yes, facts and the world's opinion agree," he replied. Puzzled he might well be by this peculiar catechism. He could only continue to reply until he should see where she was leading.

"And your victory will mean a new frontier, a new order of international relations and a long peace, you think? Peace—a long peace?"

Was there ever a soldier who did not fight for peace? Was there ever a call for more army-corps, or guns that was not made in the name of peace? He had his ready argument, spoken with the forcible conviction of an expert.

"This war was made for peace—the only kind of peace that there can be," he said. "My ambition, if any glory comes to me out of this war, is to have later generations say, 'He brought peace.'"

Though the premier, could he have heard this, might have smiled, even grinned, he would have understood Westerling's unconsciousness of inconsistency. The chief of staff had set himself a task in victory which had no military connection. Without knowing why, he wanted to win ascendancy over her mind.

"The man of action!" exclaimed Marta, her eyes opening very wide, as they would to let in the light when she heard something new that pleased her or gave food for thought. "The man of action, who thinks of an ideal as a thing not of words but as the end of action!"

"Exactly!" said Westerling, sensible of another of her gifts. She could get the essence of a thing in a few words. "When we have won and set another frontier, the power of our nation will be such in the world that the Browns can never afford to attack us," he went on. "Indeed, no two of the big nations of Europe can afford to make war without our consent. We shall be the arbiters of international relations. We shall command peace."

"Yes, the peace of force, of fact! If it could be won in any other way I should not be here on this veranda in command of an army of invasion."

"That was my idea—for that I planned," he was making up for having overshoot himself in his confession that he had brought on the war as a final step for his ambition.

"You mean that you can gain peace by propaganda and education only when human nature has so changed that we can have law and order and houses are safe from burglary and pedestrians from pickpockets without policemen? Is that it?" she asked.

"Yes, yes! You have it! You have found the wheat in the chaff!"

"Perhaps because I have been seeing something of human nature—the human nature of both the Browns and the Grays at war. I have seen the Browns throwing hand grenades and the Grays in wanton disorder in our dining room directly they were out of touch with their officers!" she said sadly as one who hates to accept disillusionment but must in the face of logic.

Westerling made no reply except to nod, for a movement on her part occupied him. She leaned forward, as she had when she had told him he would become chief of staff; her hands clasped over her knees her eyes bright with a question. It was the attitude of the prophetess. But with the prophecy she had been a little wavering; the fire in her eyes had precipitated an idea. Now it forged another question.

"And you think that you will win?" she repeated with the slow emphasis which demands a careful answer.

The deliberateness of his reply was in keeping with her mood. He was detached, he was a referee.

"Yes, I know that we shall. Numbers make it so, though there be no choice of skill between the two sides."

His tone had the confidence of the flow of a mighty river in its destination on its way to the sea. There was nothing in it of prayer, of hope, of desperation, as there had been in Lanstron's "We shall win!" spoken to her in the arbor at their last interview. She drew forward slightly in her chair. Her eyes seemed much larger and nearer to him. They were sweeping him up and down as if she were seeing the slim figure of Lanstron in contrast to Westerling's sturdiness, as if she were measuring the might of the five millions behind him and the three millions behind Lanstron. She let go a half-whispered "Yes!" which seemed to reflect the conclusion gained from the power of his presence.

"Then my mother's and my own interests are with you—the interests of peace are with you!" she declared.

She did not appear to see the sudden, uncontrolled gleam of victory in his eyes. By this time it had become a habit for Westerling to wait silently for her to come out of her abstractions. To disturb one might make it unproductive.

"Then if I want to help the cause of peace I should help the Grays!"

The exclamation was more to herself than to him. He was silent. This girl in a veranda chair desiring to aid him and his five million bayonets and four thousand guns! Quixote and the windmills—but it was amazing, it was fine! The golden glow of the sunset was running in his veins in a pease of personal triumph. The profile turned over so little. Now it was looking at the point where Dellarme had lain dying. Westerling noted the smile playing on the lips. It had the quality of a smile over a task completed—Dellarme's smile. She started, she was trembling all over in the resistance of some impulse—some impulse that gradually gained headway and at last broke its bonds.

"For I can help—I can help!" she cried out, turning to him in wild indecision which seemed to plead for guidance. "It's so terrible—yet if it would hasten peace—I—I know much of the Browns' plan of defense. I know where they are strong in the first line and—and one place where they are weak there—and a place where they are weak in the main line!"

"You do!" Westerling exploded. The plans of the enemy! The plans that neither Bouchard's saturnine cunning, nor bribes, nor spies could ascertain! It was like the bugle call to the hunter. But he controlled himself. "Yes, yes!" He was thoughtful and guarded.

"Do you think it is right to tell?" Marta gasped half inarticulately.

"Right? Yes, to hasten the inevitable—to save lives!" declared Westerling with deliberate assurance.

"I—I want to see an end of the killing!" She sprang to her feet as if about to break away tumultuously, but paused, away unsteadily, and passed her hand across her eyes.

"We intend a general attack on the first line of defense tonight!" he exclaimed, his supreme thought leaping into words.

"And you would want the information?"

on about the first line to night. It is to be of service?"

"Yes, to night!"

Marta brought her hands together in a tight clasp. Her gaze fluttered for a minute over the tea table. When she looked up her eyes were calm.

"It is a big thing, isn't it?" she said. "A thing not to be done in an impulse."

"I try never to do big things in an impulse. When I see that I am in danger of it I always say, 'Go by yourself and think for half an hour!' So I must now. In a little while I will let you know my decision."

Without further formality she arose, crossed the lawn to the terrace steps, Westerling watched her saunter, passing along the path of the second terrace, passing slowly, hesitantly, until she was out of sight. Then he stood for a time gazing a group on his own emotions before he went into the house.

GIVE LAVISHLY TO CHARITY

Londoners Can Not Truthfully Be Accused of Stinginess, at Least in One Respect.

London is rich in charities, as well as in many other things. Ten million pounds is the estimated income of charities in London, which is more than twice the annual expenditure of £4,000,000 on poor relief. This interesting fact is mentioned in London Statistics, a volume which contains many curious facts regarding the metropolis.

It is pointed out, for instance, that of the 67,137 old age pensioners in London, 46,524 are women. This preponderance of women is partly explained by the fact that widows in the whole of London number 199,896.

By the way, the largest number of bachelors, 90,072, and Wandsworth the most spinsters, 99,289.

Referring again to London's charities, it is interesting to note that over nine and a half million meals were given to necessitous children in 1912, each child receiving an average of just over five meals. More than seven and a half million books are lent by the public libraries in a year, juveniles taking considerably over one million.

That Londoners take full advantage of the facilities for amusement is illustrated by the fact that at least one and a half million people visit a theater, music hall, cinema show, or concert hall in London every week.

Crime still flourishes, the number of persons tried for indictable offenses ranging from 9,000 to 10,000.

Among other interesting facts contained in the volume referred to are the figures regarding traffic. Altogether there are 2,192 miles of streets in the metropolis, of which 150 miles are laid with tram lines. The busiest spot in London would appear to be Piccadilly, east of Berkeley street, where 21,745 vehicles, of which 21,612 were motor driven, pass along it in 12 hours. London bridge is the busiest bridge with 17,253 vehicles in the same time, but Westminster bridge with 17,204 vehicles runs it very close.

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

Sage Tea and Sulphur Turns Gray, Faded Hair Dark and Glossy.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray, also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair.

Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy." You will get a large bottle for about 50 cents.

Everybody uses the old, famous recipe because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly.

You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time, by morning the gray hair disappears and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

A Mistaken Idea

Many people are of the opinion that unless Olive Oil is imported it is not good. This is a mistaken idea. In foreign countries people who grow Olives have very small holdings of one or two acres. The mills for the manufacture of Olive Oil are of necessity situated a long distance from the orchards, which is plainly apparent from the fact that Spain produces much more oil for mechanical than for edible purposes.

SYLMAR OLIVE OIL retains all the rich fruit flavor of Superior California Olives and is sold under $1,000.00 guarantee of purity.

Prices, 30c, 60c and $1.00 bottles. Imported oil has advanced. No advance on Sylmar California Olive Oil.

FLA. AND COMMON LABORERS

Georgia State Law Says They Are, While President Tender of National League Says No.

Are ball players common laborers? That is the latest question that is agitating the fans. If you ask the players themselves such a question (you know they all have plenty of artistic temperament) they will probably be insulted. Says Detroit Journal Warrants are now out for a Federal league scout who is said to have tried to entice players of the Valdosta and Waycross teams of the Georgia state league to jump. Pres James Sinclair at whose

President John K. Tener.

request the warrants were issued, invoked the George contract labor law, which was passed to prevent anybody from tampering with laborers under contract. They may consider ball players laborers down south (and you can't wonder that they do when men go out to the ball park and toll in the boiling sun day after day when they might be cooling themselves off in the shade of the magnolia trees, but President Tener of the National league doesn't think so. "Baseball players are neither miners, hot carriers nor ditch diggers," declares the National boss and governor of Pennsylvania, "baseball players are professional men and professional men do not strike. IN THE MOVIES

THE GLOBE OFFERS GOOD PICTURES THIS EVENING

"The Light on Deadwood Trail" is an exciting story of the capture of an American party by marauding Mexicans shown at the Globe this evening.

"European War Special" is a good real showing the German army in the field and London in wartime.

"Little Miss Bonny" is a pretty story at the Globe this evening.

"The Saving Presence" is an interesting film shown at the Globe this evening. The story is laid in a manufacturing town and deals with questions that arise between workman and employer.

"The Girl Sophie" is a humorous story of two German musicians in a western town and the way they were received.

"SACRIFICE OF PAULINE" AT OPERA HOUSE TONIGHT

"The Sacrifice of Pauline" is an interesting and real feature at the opera house this evening. The story is filled with thrilling scenes and moves with rapid action, plot and counter plot following each other with growing interest. The film is well acted and well worth seeing.

"A Neighborly Quarell" is a lighter comedy at the opera house this evening. The quarell is quite a feud but lacks little to make it a serious affair. The humor is shown in the way matters were adjudged.

INFANTILE PARALYSIS CURE NEAR, DR. FLEXNER HINTS

Reports Finding of Germ of Disease That Makes Cripples.

Hope of a cure for infantile paralysis, a disease that has baffled the medical profession for years, is held out by Dr. Simon Flexner, director of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research.

Dr. Flexner explains that through animal experimentation the micro organism of the disease, heretofore invisible even with the aid of the most powerful microscopes and extremely difficult to grow outside the human body, has finally been grown in test tubes and is found visible when viewed through the microscope in mucus. He makes no definite promise but he leaves the distinct impression that recent experiment with this minute germ will soon produce results of a most important character.

Research work concerning the disease has been in progress at the Rockefeller Institute for about six years. Results at first were similar to those in other laboratories, where the virulent agent eluded primary microscopic detection. But the ample means at the command of Dr. Flexner enabled him to pursue the work beyond the stage at which it had blocked others.

Infant paralysis is spread in many ways. The common housefly is an active carrier of it. Bedbugs and other carriers have been found which do not themselves suffer from the disease, but which appear to exhale the tiny organisms and thus infect susceptible persons with whom they come in contact.

The disease has appalling power to produce deformities.

MILEAGE RATE NOT TO BE SUSPENDED TODAY

Increases of one quarter cent per mile in the cost of railway mileage books will become effective on October 1. The tariff proposing an advance will not be suspended by the interstate commerce commission but may be investigated later while effective.

Ever since the filing by the railroads during the latter part of August of tariffs proposing an increase in the cost of mileage books much interest throughout the country has been manifested in the attitude the commission might take toward the advance. The railway officials generally announced that the action of the commission in the five per cent advance rate case, which held the passenger fares on railways generally were inadequate, and that the roads will be justified in increasing them.

Tariffs filed in August proposed an advance of one fourth of a cent a mile in the cost of mileage books on roads that were charging the public only two cents a mile for mileage transportation. Protests against the increase were made to the commission both by individuals and by organizations, but despite the objection it is the intention of the commission to permit the increase to go into effect. It is expected that after the advance shall have become effective formal complaint will be filed against the increase and that the matter then will be threshed out before the committee.

After Platform Riders

The Pennsylvania Railroad company has written letters to the general managers and superintendents of the larger Pittsburgh industries asking them to post notices warning employees against the dangers of standing on the platform of moving trains. This action is a part of a campaign adopted by the company to reduce the number of accidents due to this habit. The following letter is posted on the bulletin boards of the Pittsburgh Division:

"Your attention is called to the fact that concerted effort on the part of every trainman is necessary at once to keep passengers from riding on platforms or steps of cars between or approaching stations.

"A letter has been sent to all industries requesting that all employees be warned of the danger of violations of the rules for safety by riding on platforms.

"This practice, now common, will be broken up by concerted action alone. If, in any case, assistance in enforcing the rule is desired, you will report to this office at once."

Freight Increase Suspended

Proposed increases in the freight rates on lumber from points of origin in the south of Ohio river transfer points and beyond railroad generally in southern territory Tuesday were suspended by the interstate commerce commission until Jan-

SOCIAL

Mrs. James Sasserman was very pleasantly surprised Monday evening when about 20 of her friends and neighbors gathered at her home on Clearfield street to celebrate her birthday. During the evening delightful music was rendered by Mrs. Gray Miller and Mrs. Paul Spackman. The refreshments were plentiful and delicious, among them being a large birthday cake baked and decorated by her son Paul Spackman. When the clock approached the hour of midnight the guests departed, leaving their best wishes for many more happy birthdays.

LOW TAXES IN DRY TOWNS

According to the Presbyterian Board of Temperance, the comptroller of the state of California, by his report of 1912, shows the following tax rates:

Wet Towns.
Oakland	$1.75
Stockton	1.62
Bakersfield	1.71
Santa Rosa	1.35
Monterey	1.45
Marystown	1.80
Eureka	1.10
Ferndale	1.30
Blue Lake	1.25
Arcata	.97
Average	$1.43

Dry Towns.
Berkley	$.97
Salina	1.11
Big Beach	1.30
Santa Anna	1.20
San Diego	1.25
San Jose	.95
Woodland	1.26
San Geronimo	1.20
National City	1.10
Fortuna	1.26
Average	$1.25

The above figures include the bonded debts of the cities. Subtracting these debts, which are usually for permanent improvements, the average of the above cities is:

FOR THE 10 WET TOWNS.....$1.10

FOR THE 10 DRY TOWNS.....$.89

Official figures of all license and no license cities in Massachusetts for twenty-five years show that, with a slightly lower average tax rate, the no-license cities:

Had 8 per cent smaller debt.
Spent 22 per cent less for police.
Spent 48 per cent less for property.
Spent 25 per cent more for good streets.
Spent 41 per cent more for education.
Increased 66 per cent more in taxable property.
Increased 79 per cent more in industry.
Increased 90 per cent more in population.

Ostrich Plumes and Fancy Feathers

NOTHING is so noticeable in the most elegant millinery prepared for the fall season as ostrich feathers. Short, broad plumes and tips lead in popularity. After them ostrich feathers developed in fancy forms have demonstrated the ingenuity of manufacturers in copying flower forms and in originating all sorts of new decorations. This fancy ostrich is to take the place of prohibited aligettes, much to the satisfaction of all right-thinking people. America having taken the initiative in doing away with the aligette, French and other designers have replaced it with ostrich and other fancy feathers quite as airy and beautiful.

Many of the new shapes are wide-brimmed, and wide brims always mean long and short plumes. Three hats are shown here in which the use of ostrich plumes in the best of mountings may be studied. It will be seen that one may use a single plume of medium length, or two long plumes, or many short ones, with equally artistic effect. But for some time the simplest forms of trimming have characterized the work of the greatest designers, and a single plume of finest quality mounted on a velvet hat leaves nothing to be desired in the way of art and elegance.

This plume is mounted on the underbrim, and its full, broad end, or "head," falls across the hair and back of the head.

The beautiful picture hat, having a wreath of ostrich tips about its brim, with ends curling upward toward the crown, is finished with a half plume on the band and underbrim at the left. To add any further trimming to this model would be as foolish as adorning the lily or painting the rose.

A wide-brimmed hat, in which a single magnificent plume is mounted on the crown at the right side, is most original and daring in its use of ostrich. The end of the plume is cut off at the beginning of the flues. The plume is laid upon the crown and sewed down in two places. It is left free to curl and curve at its own sweet and graceful will. A narrow band of handsome moire ribbon, tied in the simplest of bows at the left side, finishes the hat. In this model the body of the hat amounts to simply a setting for the plume, which is featured by the manner in which it is placed.

Ostrich plumes and tips in fine quality make a good investment because no matter what the vagaries of fashion they are never "out."

WAR MAPS FOR PROGRESS READERS

Valuable Aids to Understanding of European Situation

A HANDSOME PIECE OF WORK

With These Maps the Public Can Tell at a Glance the Location of the Cities and Towns Where the Belligerent Nations are Struggling for Supremacy—How Maps May be Procured.

In keeping with its determination to give the readers of the Progress the latest and best news of the great European war, the management of this paper has decided to distribute to the public at a nominal cost to the people an official map of the territory in which the big armies of the warring powers are fighting. With the aid of this map the citizen can trace accurately the movements of the armies and discover the scenes of the most important battles of the day by day in the news columns of the Progress.

The map is large, is printed in two colors, with the names and locations of the towns and cities, and is a valuable aid to the understanding of the situation in the war zone. The map was originally made in Europe by the war office, at once expansive and complete, and has been reproduced in this country on copperplate. The type is clear and the plates, bought by the man who is after information regarding the war, are plainly marked. On the back of this map is to be found the latest and most authentic information regarding the nations now engaged in the conflict.

The Progress has been able to procure a number of these maps for distribution to those who wish to have an intelligent conception of the great events which are happening in Europe. To secure one of these maps the reader will cut the coupon from another page of this paper and present it, with ten cents, at the counter of the business office of the Progress and one of the maps will be handed to him. As the number of copies of the map which the Progress was able to get is limited it will be well for those who wish copies to call early.

The maps will be sent by mail either in town or out of town for 12 cents in coin, stamps or money order. They are really the most valuable maps of Europe that are in existence, and will prove a source of profit to those who wish to learn more than they know of the countries across the sea. If you wish to keep posted on the war, get one of these maps at once.

See in the greatest condition the war.
